Tony Schantin was hurt in a peculiar manner early this week, when he was struck by a projectile thrown off from an ensilage cutter which exploded when it was being operated at his home farm. The force of the explosion was so great that fragments of castings were thrown for a distance of several hundred feet, one going through the roof of the barn and one through the radiator of the tractor which was operating the machine. One hit Tony a glancing blow on the temple and cut a jagged gash which bled profusely but which is not expected to result seriously.

You Can't Buy Our Goods

This bank bought Liberty Bonds of every issue. We are going to hold them until maturity.

No matter how seductive the attractions of other investment securities, we wouldn't think of selling our Liberty Bonds at present market prices.

That would be poor business, buying at par and selling for less. We don't do business that way.

More than that, it would be poor Americanism. We lent some money to Uncle Sam until a certain day at a certain rate of interest. We don't intend to "call" our loan to him.

We urge every man, woman and child in this community who owns Liberty Bonds, not only to hang on to them but to buy more. Talk to us before you sell your Liberty Bonds or make investments. We know our business and we are willing to give you the benefit of our expert knowledge and experience free of charge.

Our profit in the transaction lies in making your acquaintance.
