EAT A PRUNE

If you're blue as indigo, and find it hard to smile,
If you think that life is empty, and to live is not worth while,
If consolation makes you worse
And you crave to ride in a hearse,
Bare in mind this little verse, and
Eat a Prune.

If your house is not insured, and it burns down to the ground,
If you lose a million dollars where it never can be found,
If you're beat up by your wife,
And your joys all turn to strife,—
Take a brand new lease on life,
Eat a Prune.

If you love a lady madly, and someone beats your time,
If you buy stock at a quarter, and it drops down to a dime,
If you're so hot and dry
That you think you're going to die—
You can live on if you try,
Eat a Prune.

For a prune will knock a bunion; it will stop your falling hair,
It's the milestone to happiness on the road from grief and care,
It is wholesome, it is cheap,
It won't perish, but will keep,
It will work, too, while you sleep—
Eat a Prune.
