ADEQUATE PROTECTION NEEDED

There is need for better protection for American industries against the competition of the low-priced European labor. This is a subject in which both capital and labor are vitally interested and it has an important bearing on the public welfare.

If American manufactured goods are to come into direct competition with European made goods, without a tariff, it simply means closing many of our home industries or putting them on a low basis on a par with conditions on the continent.

It has taken a long time and much effort to build up our industrial institution to their present standing and raise labor to its present high level of value. This can quickly be undone if our doors of commerce are open to unrestricted foreign competition.

Europe is desperate in her efforts to recover from the effects of the world war during which time all her foreign trade was lost. Now she would flood our markets with raw materials and manufactured articles cheaper than we can produce them with our well paid labor.

Our plea is not for a high tariff but an adequate tariff for protection and this will mean also a source of revenue.

Congress now has before it a tariff bill, which, if adopted, with the American valuation plan for assessing ad valorem duties on imports, will afford the best relief to the evil which today threatens many of the leading industries of America with extinction.

When Australia placed an embargo upon German goods, that government said: "Our boys fought against the Germans and we are going to see when they come home they have jobs, and we are not going to allow Germany to rehabilitate herself at the expense of our own people." Canada, instead of allowing German merchandise to be valued at the present rate of the mark, has arbitrarily determined to value imports from that country at 50 per cent the normal exchange rate of the mark or seven and one half times the present rate.

England has placed a duty against German goods for the protection of its people, but with the proviso allowing for the return of that duty if the goods are shipped to the United States. In other words the duty is adequate to protect British industry but the British financier can take in these goods, pay the duty on them, and then ship them over here and get a return of his duty plus a profit on the transaction. And the American workman is thrown into competition with the low-priced German.

With the German mark 15 times below normal, as compared with a depreciation of little more than one dollar in the English pound sterling, two cents in the Japanese yen and about 10 cents in the French franc, America faces a problem in arranging a schedule of tariff rates that will provide adequate protection against Germany and not act as an embargo against other foreign countries if the present system of assessing duties on foreign valuation is used. But by deprecating all ad valorem duties on the American valuation plan, or wholesale market value in this country, no discrimination is shown and all countries will be treated alike in the amount of duty imposed on imports.

If the American valuation plan is not made a part of the tariff bill, the lawn mower industry in this country, giving employment to more than 4,000 people at an average wage of $5 per day and producing 800,000 lawn mowers annually, will be destroyed. J. M. Loutz, president of the F. & N. Lawn Mower company, says in a statement to the secretary of the American Valuation association, "I have recently received a German catalogue, dated May 2, 1921, quoting a price of 60 marks on a lawn mower which is an exact duplicate of a popular American model that at today's price of labor and materials can not be produced in America for less than $4.25. With the mark worth but a fraction more than a cent and a half in American money, the German price for the mower is 76 cents, or six times below the American price. So you can see what I mean when I say this industry will be destroyed, not crippled, if adequate protection is not provided."

Many other industries face a like fate. The basket manufacturers of America, 75 in all, giving employment to 10,000 workers, and with a capital investment of $10,000,000, face ruin. "Many baskets are being imported from Germany and Japan, where labor is extremely cheap and much of the work is done in the homes by the women and children," writes E. A. Florang, president of the Burlington Basket company, "and the only way we hope to compete with these countries is to have the import duties based on the American Valuation Plan."
