MARSHAL FOCH.

No man ever before occupied so high a position in the military world or was held in such high esteem by so many as Marshal Ferdinand Foch who spent yesterday in Portland. He was in supreme command of the allied forces the last year of the world war and his strategy led to final victory over Germany. The marshal is a general of recognized ability and a man of fine qualities. The world never acclaimed a more gentlemanly character as hero. Yet, soldier like, he is firm as flint.

Foch as general was well supported by Pershing and Haig and the armies under their command. Long as the war lasted it would be going on still, had not Germany given up, with such men as Foch, in command who know no such word as fail in a cause fundamentally just and right.

FRENCH MARVEL AT "FAST WORK."

In conformity with a long established practice in American journalism, all of the addresses, etc., of the opening session of the armament conference were delivered in advance to the newspapers of the country, subject to their release upon delivery. Among such advance releases was a copy of the prayer with which the conference was opened. These copies were given not only to American newspapers, but to all representatives of the foreign press. One of the French delegates was very much impressed by the fact that he received copy of a prayer which had not yet been offered. "American journalism is very progressive," he said. "A parson's prayer reaches your eyes before it reaches the ears of God. That is very fast work."

At the Turning Point.

The world will not long remember whether the disarmament conference held open or secret sessions, provided the results are satisfactory. What the world must have to save it from universal bankruptcy, financial and moral, is less expensive and less provocative guarantees of peace. If it can be done by private conference, well and good; if it can be done by public discussion and public hearings, so much the better. The great objective is prevention of war, through abandonment, wholly or in part, of the machinery of warfare.

No one expects disarmament now; but everyone desires, demands and expects limitation of armament, with complete disarmament (except for purely police and defensive purposes) as a possible ultimate.

If the conference fails, what hope is there for civilization? If it succeeds, what may not every nation accomplish for itself and what may not all together accomplish for the world?—Portland Oregonian.

The Fair Tax Question

The November 26 issue of Oregon Voter discusses quite fully many phases of the 1925 fair tax proposal. The Voter is not enthusiastic over the proposal to raise $2,000,000 by taxation over three years, in the state outside of Portland. The Voter discusses the conditions and probabilities. The recent heavy vote in favor of the tax in Portland will have great weight in the state outside. Portland votes to raise one-third of the six million dollars needed by direct tax. One million will come from private subscriptions and another million will be Multnomah county's share of the state tax, which includes Portland property.

This leaves two million dollars to be raised in the 35 other counties of the state. The millage is estimated by The Voter to range from .70 in Lincoln county to 1.39 in Polk county. In Multnomah county it will be about one mill. The average for the state will be a little less than a mill for the three year period.

The Voter thinks the state will conclude that if Portland is willing to bear so large a part of the expense the fair tax should be voted. It also thinks there will be no strongly organized effort against the tax. Its conclusion is significant:

"Under such conditions taxes are voted for any popular cause, and the fair is an exceedingly popular cause. We have an idea it will carry."

Business men generally including bankers, will favor the tax, says the Voter. It could have added that newspapers and other publications generally throughout the state will urge the advantages of the fair and aid in the campaign for its success.

If the state, even to its farthest comers, votes so liberally to help finance the 1925 fair it should be well represented on the management and the scope as well as name of the fair should be so planned that it will be in truth an All-Oregon fair. And this doubtless is the intention.

The Outlook does not believe that this is the proper method of financing great expositions. County fairs and state fairs may be supported or aided by direct taxation for they are regarded as necessary to agricultural development. It takes a far stretch of thought to regard the proposed 1925 exposition in that light. It will have to be shown that the people of the state at large will benefit educationally and materially sufficient to make the fair a greater state fair—at least for that year.

But the Outlook voices a protest only against the method of a state taxation. It looks too much like forcing something onto already heavily burdened taxpayers. But the method has been decided on by supposedly wiseheads and supposedly unselfish men. Since it is up to the people the Outlook will urge that the tax be voted. We are heartily in favor of the fair. We would favor it if it was anywhere else in the state.

Oregon needs the fair. Oregon is able to support the fair. Oregon will benefit from the fair. Oregon should help finance the fair.

Grange and Non-Partisan League.

The Non-Partisan League of Oregon, if there be such a thing, has endorsed the Master of the Oregon State Grange as its candidate for governor.

In Oregon a number of newspapers, an Agricultural college official, and the Master of the State Grange have been N. P. L. men, have worked for and been recognized as champions of North Dakota methods.

The college professor was offered presidency of the State Agricultural College in North Dakota, and the State Grange head was invited to help organize Idaho, and advocates state socialism.

Since the North Dakota recall election has abolished the N.P.L.s state administration and Townley has gone to prison for sedition, what does the State Grange think about the situation?

Washington State Grange Master Bouck was removed from his high office, together with the secretary and executive committee by the national grange in session at Portland last week.

The removal was for radicalism and disloyal utterances and they are barred from membership in the order forever. But will the Grangers of Oregon support adherents of Townleyism for office?

The political grange leaders in Oregon who have catered to North Dakota state socialism for the past few years would have plunged this state into the same mire of communism.

They are offering the farmers of Oregon the same program of state elevators, state insurance, state marketing, state utilities, state this and state that that doubled and trebled taxes in North Dakota.

More than 4000 newspaper publications have gone out of existence in the United States and Canada between the years 1914 and 1921. The reason of course is increasing costs of production away beyond possible income.
