GRESHAM LOCALS

Arthur J. Mugg and T. C. Walker, insurance surveyors are making surveys in Gresham for a new insurance map for the insurance companies and the rating bureau. They of course have to have access to the various premises and ask the courtesy of all residents of the city.

Dr. A. W. Botkin was seen on the streets of Gresham for the first time since his operation, although he has been up for several days. He is weak yet, but says he is feeling fine.

Mrs. Mary C. Shattuck visited a few days this week with friends in Gresham.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Thompson and daughter motored over Sunday to visit Mr. Thompson's parents, Dr. and Mrs. A. Thompson.

Fred Zimmerman, who lives northeast of Gresham on the Base Line road was operated on last Monday at the St. Vincent hospital for what was thought to be appendicitis. He is still in a very serious condition, but the doctors have every hope for his complete recovery.

Jane, the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Guy Fieldhouse, of St. Helens, has been visiting her grandmother, Mrs. Martha Fieldhouse and friends in Gresham. Mr. and Mrs. Fieldhouse drove from St. Helens after their daughter last night and returned today.

The Mother's Jewels had a mite box opening Tuesday afternoon. A program was given by little folks and refreshments served. The committee consisted of Mrs. Marion Johnson, Mrs. Wiles, Miss Neal, Mrs. James Sterling. Mite box offering amounted to $3.00.

Mrs. W. A. Winters visited her son Lyle, at O. A. C. last Saturday and Sunday and enjoyed the special celebration in honor of mothers.

James Sterling has accepted work with a large woolen manufacturing concern in Portland and goes to and from his work daily by automobile.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Lord, of Cando, North Dakota were in Gresham Tuesday visiting the Honey families. They came through Gresham from California where they spent the winter.

A superior grade of macaroni is now being demonstrated at Walrad's. Only the heart of the wheat is used thus eliminating much of the starch. The result is a macaroni that remains firm and yet tender when cooked. The new product is put out by the Woodcock Elbo people.

The Federal Reserve System—Our Financial Safety-Valve.

(This is Number Ten of a series of special articles published by the First State Bank, Gresham, Oregon, by permission, approval, and upon information furnished by its New York correspondent, the National City Bank of New York, the largest bank in the world today.)

Banks in the United States operate in a manner quite different from those of most other important countries. We have more than 30,000 banks in this country, most of which are moderate-sized institutions owned by people of their immediate neighborhood and which confine their operations to a single city or town. In most of the European countries and in Canada, the banking business is carried on by a few large banks having many branches scattered throughout the country.

The American system of individual banks, each serving its own field, has much to recommend it, because it assures a close contact between the banks and its clients and because it enables the officers of banks to be in close touch with the affairs of the business men and other depositors whom the bank serves. However, until the Federal Reserve System was put into operation in 1914, this system of separate banks suffered from a very serious difficulty in times of stress or when the demands for banking accommodations exceeded the capacity of the banks.

A bank, of course, does not keep on hand all the money that has been deposited with it. Modern industry and the carrying on of business require the use of the credit which is based on the deposits in the banks, which simply means that the banker is able to lend out most of the funds left in his care to borrowers in whose solvency and ability to repay he has confidence.

Under the old regime, each bank had to stand alone in times of money stringency and there was no strong central reservoir of credit which could be tapped to supply unusual requirements for credit. The money panic of 1907 illustrates the difficulties with which the banks had to contend; there was plenty of wealth and plenty of consumable goods in the country, but the machinery was lacking by which these goods could be made the bases for sound credit and the issuance of sound currency.

Fortunately the Federal Reserve System came into existence before the outbreak of the European war and provided the means by which all of the banks of the country are able to pool their strength, so that, in effect, the united strength of the banks in the country is back of the system.

The system provides machinery by which the individual banks may shift their limited assets and liabilities to a strong Reserve Bank which, in addition to its other functions, has the power to issue lawful money. (To be continued in the next issue of the Gresham Outlook.)

The First State Bank is a member of the Federal Reserve System, and is entitled to all its privileges. The First State Bank is examined by the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco, California, as well as by the State Banking Department of Oregon. The State Banking Department has asked for a report from all banks as of May 5th. The First State Bank's report appears elsewhere in this issue.—Adv.
