O.A.C. INSTRUCTOR URGES CARE IN SELECTING EGGS

(Claude W. Whitehouse)

Care in selecting eggs for hatching is necessary to increase the production of stock, is the belief of A. G. Lunn, professor of poultry husbandry at Oregon Agricultural College.

"The first and most important consideration in the choice of eggs is the health and vigor of the parent stock," says Mr. Lunn. "This is where the trapester has the advantage for he can tell which hens are good layers and whether or not their eggs are desirable for hatching."

Eggs that are normal in size, color, and shape are preferable. The shell should be free from blemishes of any kind with no ridges or weak spots. The weight of the egg should never be less than two ounces.

"The successful farmer or poultryman who is trapestering uses eggs only from tested hens," says Mr. Lunn. It is not good practice to hatch from pullet eggs principally because the pullets are untried as producers and through some weakness may fall down during the year. If the pullets have been marked during the pullet year and culled in the fall, it is safe to suppose that those remaining have met the test of high production."

Eggs from the free-range breeding stock are more desirable for hatching as breeding stock that have been kept in confinement will often show a lack of vigor and vitality by poor fertility and hatchability of the eggs.

Tailored Touches for the Homemade Gown.

Self-trimmings are the most popular tailored finishes for the season, reports Miss Lila O'Neale, assistant professor of household arts at the Oregon Agricultural College.

Binding, cut on the true bias, is one of the simplest and most usable of self-trimmings. This may be used on collars, cuffs, panels, and round neck lines. If desired the binding may be of contrasting color. This type of trimming has replaced the old hemstitching edge which was used indiscriminately on all types of material.

"Bias trimmings of the same material as the dress are economical and unquestionably good taste," says Miss O'Neale. "A clever finish for the neckline is the use of a narrow bias band instead of the time-worn ribbon bow. The ends may be finished with colored beads or left plain."

One way of letting down last summer's skirt is by binding it around the bottom with a bias fold. When finished the binding should be from three-fourths to one inch wide.

Self-covered buttons are popular this season. These may be used down the front of a vest or on the slash of a sleeve. The rule that the space between the buttons should be less than the diameter of the buttons should be followed, especially in using small ones. Long lines were achieved on one model by applying flat folds of the material from the shoulder to the waistline and putting buttons on the full length of the fold.

Set-in pockets always give a tailored finish to a dress says Miss O'Neale. Tailored button holes, such as the bound button holes, may be converted into a pocket. Arrow heads make an appropriate finish for ends of pockets. Commercial patterns usually give directions for the making of these button holes. The bound button holes may be used as separate decoration.

Narrow string belts are used for all materials. They are especially good for the stout figure. They may be finished in numerous ways such as fringe, beads, points, and square ends. An easy way to turn a narrow belt is to fasten a safety pin through one thickness of an end and work the pin through the belt.

Double loops of grosgrain ribbon, silk braid, and linen tape are good tailored finishes. The loops may be buttoned down if desired. These trimmings may be used in the same way as bias edges.

"Beading is not being done right now, and heavy embroidery is going out too," says Miss O'Neale. "The city shops are selling such decorated models very cheaply at present."

The materials of today are so pliable they work up nicely into self-trimmings. The satin-back crepe may be trimmed by using the reverse side of the material. This makes a truly tailored finish.

Materials suggested as suitable for self-trimmings are the taffetas, the satin-back crepes, the crepes, the soft woolsens, the ginghams, the cotton crepes, and the linens.
