OREGON LEADS IN SCHOOL POPULATION

The Oregon Voter, in its issue of August 4, gives some interesting statistics on school population, value of school property and per capita cost of education in the various states of the union.

According to these statistics Oregon led all other states in percentage of school population, 5 to 18 years, in daily attendance in public, elementary and secondary schools.

According to the same authority Oregon ranks ninth in average value of school property per pupil enrolled among the various states.

In the matter of cost per capita of total population for elementary and secondary education the average for the United States is given as $9.80.

Montana is the highest at $22.24 and Mississippi the lowest at $3.06.

Oregon is nearly $3 above the average at $12.76.

This is not a bad showing for Oregon in any respect and, in fact, is exceedingly good in most respects.

Timber Billions

In a recent booklet entitled "Timber Billions," issued as one of a series in the million-dollar advertising campaign being conducted by the Great Northern, Northern Pacific and Burlington lines, Oregon's timber wealth is explained in simple but impressive terms.

For example, when we are told that there are 480 billions of feet of standing timber in Oregon, the statement means nothing to us.

Or, put it another way. Normally we build 400,000 houses a year in the United States.

Our forest wealth is only one of Oregon's major resources.—Oregon Journal of Commerce.

Economies versus Politics

Back in Minnesota a so-called Farmer-Labor party has triumphed at the polls. A "dirt" farmer has been elected to the senate, supposedly by the farm and labor vote, and thereby another blow has been struck in the great cause of emancipating agriculture.

For those who believe that the farmer and laborer have much in common, the following facts are offered: 63 1/2 dozen or 762 eggs, pay a plasterer (in New York) for one day's work of eight hours.

17 1/2 bushels of corn, or a year's receipts from half an acre, pay a bricklayer for a day.

23 chickens, weighing three pounds each, pay a painter in New York.

42 pounds of butter, or the output from 14 cows, fed and milked 24 hours pay a plumber $14 per day.

175 pounds of hog, eight months' feeding and care, pay a carpenter.

In the light of these figures, which are facts, how is it possible that the farmer can hold a sympathetic feeling toward the labor unions? Why, in any case should the farmer look to politics for the solution of his problems?

No. The agricultural problem is not a problem of politics but of economics. The United States government is the strongest on earth, but no fiat of government will change the immutable law of supply and demand.

THE LOST GRAND DUKE

THOSE familiar with the pomp and ceremony which hedged in the former court of Austria have always maintained that the tragic disappearance of Johann Salvator, archduke of Austria, prince of Hungary and grand duke of Tuscany, cousin of Francis Joseph and son of Leopold II, was due as much to his radical tendencies and the fact that he persisted in airing his views in print as to his infatuation for Ludmilla Stubel, the beautiful daughter of a Vienna shopkeeper.

Whatever the cause, the young archduke's reaction to the discipline inflicted by his royal cousin was to resign all his honors, strip himself of his titles, convert a large portion of his estate into cash, and, as the crowning insult to his relatives, to elope with Ludmilla Stubel, whom he had met incognito some months before.

When it became known that he really intended carrying through his wild plan, even force was resorted to in order to prevent him from contracting what was recognized as a mesalliance, but he concealed his identity under the name of John Orth—the name which he had used in courting Ludmilla Stubel—and the pair were hastily married, and then escaped to London.

The Margharita's usual course was between Buenos Aires and Valparaiso, and, after making several successful trips, she finally left the former port on July 13, 1890—and vanished as completely as if the sea had opened and swallowed her.

During the Chilean war Archduke Johann was reported to be fighting on the side of the congressionalists, and, some ten years later, the son of the president of Argentina stated that he had made the trip from Buenos Aires to Cherbourg with a man who was none other than the former archduke of Austria.

In addition the lost grand duke has been "located" in California, has been "identified" as Admiral Yamagata of the Japanese navy, and was "recognized" by reputable witnesses in several engagements of the World war.

Evidently the emperor of Austria never placed full credence in the story of his death, for in Francis Joseph's will was a clause to the effect that the archduke's estate of some $10,000,000 was to be held intact until something definite was learned about his fate—a point upon which the memoirs of the former kaiser may eventually throw some light.

Until this the mystery of the lost grand duke must remain as one of the unsolved riddles of history.

Holland's Way.

In several places the rivers in Holland make their entrances to the sea over extensive sand-beds, the water being so shallow that large vessels cannot sail in it. Rather than remove the sand-beds, which were looked upon in olden times as a defense, since they then kept men-of-war at a distance, the Dutch adopted the plan of sending out two large flat-bottomed craft to the small trading vessels that wish to enter the harbor.

The American Legion ritual used by that organization for ceremonial occasions affords a striking example of non-sectarianism, remarkable in these days of religious intolerance.

The ritual now used was drawn up by a Presbyterian clergyman, a Roman Catholic priest, and a Jewish rabbi, who were chaplains of the A. E. F. in France.

PETER GNOME'S STORY

Peter Gnome was much amused. "Well," he said after he was back in Fairyland where all the Gnomes and Brownies and Elves and Fairies were, "I put on my invisible robe today and went for a walk.

"It was a most interesting walk. That is," he added, "I thoroughly enjoyed it."

"We'd like to hear about it," said the others. They were having a Fairyland supper and they all had good appetites, for the air was brisk and cold.

"I met Fly-High, the Elves' bird, you know."

"Of course, all the Fairyland people knew Fly-High!"

"Fly-High asked me if I'd like to take a little trip upon his back."

"I accepted gladly, knowing what nice trips Fly-High took one upon and also what a comfortable back he had."

"So off we went. We went to a place upon a bay. We watched the sun drawing water, as they say. It looked almost like a waterfall of rays of light coming down from the sun and very beautiful it was."

"Part of the sky was very dark while in another part it was bright."

"But the most amusing thing of all was that in the town upon this bay all the children were waiting for their daddies to come home by the late afternoon boat which came across the bay from the big city on the other side."

"I don't mean to say it was amusing to see the children. It was very nice to see them but one wouldn't call it amusing."

"No, I was amused because every single child said:

"Oh, I see my daddy's boat now! Oh, there comes my daddy's boat!"

"For to each child it was his or her daddy's boat when daddy was upon it!"

"Then I met a boy sitting down by a harbor in a quaint old town. He was sitting upon some high rocks and far out beyond him was the ocean."

"He was talking to another boy. 'I feel so very high up,' said the first boy, 'when the tide is going out, and these rocks seem so high and like such huge rocks then.'

"But when the tide is coming in the rocks seem so low and I don't feel as though I amounted to anything at all."

"Especially when the tide pays no attention to me and as it comes up slowly I know it's going to surprise me with a good drenching if I don't get out of its way in plenty of time."

"Once I was reading an interesting story," said the second boy, 'and the tide did give me just such a surprise.'

"It seemed to be saying that it wanted some of my attention and that the book couldn't have it all."

"Then," continued Peter Gnome, "I wandered about the rocks and took great whiffs of the slippery sea weeds and the salty air."

"Next Fly-High took me to see the most wonderful of this year's snow forts."

"It was very magnificent. It was round and low and it was built upon a hill of snow which made it look just like an old fort upon a citadel."

"It was the most handsome fort I ever saw."

"And inside the fort were snow soldiers, while from the top of the fort waved a flag from a stick."

"That was the only part of the fort not made of snow."

"From there Fly-High took me to see an old deserted castle and I wandered through the great rooms making up stories to myself."

"I made-believe that I was living in that castle and that there were many important things to be attended to and that I had to see to them all, all over the castle."

"Fly-High said he didn't think we'd ever get away from that castle."

"And he had one more thing to show me before we came home and that was to see the new Art gallery of the Icicle artists."

"They have certainly been doing handsome work, handsome work," Peter Gnome ended as he saw the Fairyland snow ice cream being brought in by the ever-willing waiters.

Prudence and Cash. "A prudent man always pays cash and avoids credit."

"Perhaps," said Senator Sorghum; "except when he's in a political campaign."
