In Accordance With the Evidence.

"The evidence seems to show," said the detective, "that the thief wore rubbers and walked backward."

"Then we must look out for a man with receding gums," remarked the wag of the force.

"Diamonds are only chunks of coal that stuck to their jobs, you see; If they'd petered out, as most of us do, Where would the diamonds be? It isn't the fact of making a start, It's the sticking that counts, I'll say, It's the fellow that knows not the meaning of fail, But hammers and hammers away, Whenever you think you've come to the end, And you're beaten as bad as can be, Remember that diamonds are chunks of coal That stuck to their jobs, you see."

Too Many Grasshoppers

One summer day a giddy Grasshopper watched a busy Ant gathering food and storing it up for the winter.

"Oh, you poor foolish slave," said the grasshopper. "Why do you work so hard? Come and dance and sing and play with me."

"No! No!" said the Ant. "If I play now, what will I eat when winter comes?"

"Oh, it isn't winter yet," said Long Legs, as he hopped away.

At last the long winter came. Then the Grasshopper went to the Ant and begged for food, but the Ant said:

"Those who play and dance all summer, must expect to dance hungry to bed in winter."

GRESHAM, OREGON

A STRONG BANK

Road-Hog came into existence with the first automobile and has flourished ever since.

Courtesy of the Road has been one of the big factors in building up the pleasures of motoring. Road-hogs violate every rule of this courtesy and consequently are about as popular as a blow-out on the Sunday morning ride to church.

There are two classes of Road-Hogs, the first class made up of folks who feel the highways have been paved and kept in condition for their use alone. They like to drive in the center of the road all the time. Turn-outs require extra exertion on the steering wheel and exertion of any kind doesn't appeal to the dyed in the wool Road-Hog.

He buys a car for pleasure and he doesn't intend to let anything interfere with that pleasure. Let the fellow behind honk his head off. Who cares? That's the mental attitude of his royal highness Mr. Hog-the-Road. At least that's his attitude when he leads the procession.

Once in a while brother meets brother and then a battle royal is on. The R-H. finds another of his kind holding up his progress and he becomes highly indignant. His mental attitude changes.

This time he is the fellow behind and it makes a lot of difference in his viewpoint.

It's then the irresistible force meets the immovable object and the strange part of it all is that as soon as they change positions, they change their line of thought at the same time.

The second class of Road-Hog comprising, those who think pedestrians should never cross streets. That is, they think so until their car is in the garage. Then, like members of class one, they see through different kind of glasses and feel that the man on the street should always have the right of way.

The queer part of Road-Hogism is that many men and women suffering from this disease are in every other way the finest kind of people. Their lives are filled with courteous and self-effacing actions until control of an automobile is placed in their hands. Then they seem to take on a new personality. Their eyes and ears are closed to the comfort of others. The disease holds them in its grip and they seem satisfied to remain there.

For every sickness, there is a remedy, so let's hope this pestilence will be eliminated some day. In the meanwhile, we can all do our best to show the value of Road Courtesy. Example is a great teacher, and if we preach the gospel of the Golden Rule long enough, it may bring light to those who, willingly or otherwise, are traveling in the dark.
