The book collection has had some interesting new additions this week. One of the most interesting of the new books is "The Life of Christ" by Papini, a fervid eloquent and still simple narrative based on the Gospel material, recreating both characters and places with unusual vividness and color and attempting continually to show in that tragic epic the many teachings suited to our time and our life.

"1492" by Mary Johnston is a romantic tale which brings vividly before the reader the Spain of Ferdinand and Isabella and the new world as first found by the white man. The story is told by Jayme de Marchena, a Spanish gentleman who, to escape persecution at home, ships with Columbus on his first voyage.

"A Woman Tender-foot in Egypt," by Grace Thompson Seton, is more than a guide to the popular sights of Egypt. It tells of the new life of the Egyptian women, of the present day relations between the English and the natives and of the joys and dangers of caravaning and camping in the Libyan desert. The people, real and fancied, who move against its colorful background are strikingly portrayed.

"In Conquistador," by Katherine Fullerton Gerould. The spirit of old Spanish romance quickens the story which depicts the sharp conflict experienced by a young American, a descendant of Scotch Covenanters on his father's side and of Spanish Conquistadors on his mother's, when he attempts to adjust his life and love to the standards of his Spanish uncle and to the needs of the ancient Mexican estate which he inherits.

"Babbitt," by Sinclair Lewis, is a about the every day life of an average most human and entertaining story of a prosperous business man in an average prosperous American city. Direct and irresistible in its appeal, but with subtle implications that make it an epitome of American city life, just what it is and just what it is not. "Good to read aloud."

Is your native state represented in "These United States," a new book which contains characterizations of twenty-eight of our states by native writers? The essays vary widely in mood and method of approach, each strongly reflecting the writers' individuality in his reactions to our changing America.

THE UNIVERSAL CAR

Looking Ahead

LAST Spring a total of 350,000 people were disappointed in not being able to obtain deliveries of Ford Cars and Trucks, as orders were placed faster than cars could be produced.

The demand for Ford Cars and Trucks this Spring will, according to all indications, be far greater than last Spring.

Winter buying has been increasing at a greater rate than ever before.

Actual retail deliveries the past 60 days totaled 308,170 Ford Cars and Trucks, an increase of 1,961 a day over a year ago.

Over 200,000 people have already ordered Ford products on our purchase plan, the majority of whom will take delivery in the Spring.

The above facts are given with the suggestion that you list your order promptly with a Ford dealer if you contemplate the purchase of a Ford Car or Truck for use this Spring or Summer and wish to avoid delay in delivery.

Ford Motor Company
