EXERCISES TO HONOR LINCOLN'S BIRTHDAY

Lincoln Day is being observed today in the schools generally throughout the county. At the Union high school special exercises took place in connection with assembly at 12:40. A prize essay on Lincoln was read by Anna Nordblom who was awarded a medal.

The essay had been selected by judges as the best out of ten written by seniors under Miss Eve Hutchison, teacher of English. The judges were H. L. St. Clair, Rev. A. S. Hisey and Rev. H. R. Gebhardt.

The essay of Anna Nordblom is published herewith. ABRAHAM LINCOLN. In the backwoods of Kentucky in a little log cabin on February 12, 1809, Abraham Lincoln was ushered into this world.

His parents were poor and consequently he received very little education. The hours which others spent in roaming the woods, or lying in ambush at a deer-lick, Abraham preferred to devote his efforts at mental improvements. He read every book he could lay his hands on.

Passages which especially struck him were down on paper, and if no paper was to be had he wrote them on a piece of wood and kept them until he got some paper. It is to be remembered that this earnest effort toward self-education extended over a period of twelve or fifteen years.

In the mean time he had to struggle with the things which are characteristic to pioneer life and so had very few moments for study. As we know our environment greatly determines what kind of men and women we will be and so it was with Lincoln. From it he received a great self-reliance which gave him the strength needed in governing our nation as he did during the terrible struggles of the Civil War.

Living with people who did not envy each other gave him a sense of equality—a consciousness which made him honest to all he met. During his youth Lincoln was given the nickname "Honest Abe" because of his honesty.

Again his environment taught him neighborliness. Here was an opportunity for him to practice what Christ declared to be next to the love of God—to love your neighbor as yourself. Lincoln sure practiced this. He was kind and neighborly to all he met. Among his comrades he was welcomed at all times not only for his power to entertain but because he instructed them. He was their leader in athletics; because of his studious habits he quickly became the best story teller among them. When Honest Abe was around no one else wanted to be the leader.

But all of Lincoln's distinction is not due to his environments. He had been reared in a pioneer condition, with its severe training in self-denial, patience and industry, which helped to develop his character and qualify him for the duties and responsibilities of leadership and government.

Lincoln was born in a slave state. Although he lived only eight years in this state he learned a great deal concerning slavery and many of his first impressions of the slaves remained with him. He expressed his opinion of slavery in the following statement, "He who would be a slave must consent to have no slave must consent to have no hate the slaveholder. He gave slavery its fatal blow during the Civil War, but to the slaveholder he extended a hand of friendship and peace.

His advancement which carried him from a poor postmaster to the President of United States, from a volunteer in the backwoods army to commander-in-chief of the army and navy was not easy. He worked for these advancements and he worked hard. From the time he left his home until he took the oath as President thirty years of hard and tedious work elapsed. It was this toiling and enduring in the work which gave Lincoln so many honors.

It is true that Lincoln also had some failures. When a storekeeper his business failed. He entered the Black Hawk war as a captain but came out as a private. His surveyor's chain and compass were sold for debts. But to Lincoln these were not failures. He counted every seeming defeat another step toward success. Each failure made him work longer and with more energy toward his goal. He felt that he could not become a skillful workman until he had finished his apprenticeship.

It was this together with his title Honest Abe which won for him the admiration of men and consequently the Presidency. In 1861 Lincoln began his career as President of United States. When he took the oath of office seven states were in rebellion and ready to secede; the North and South were ready to take arms against each other because of the controversy over slavery; there was treason in the whole nation. He began his work immediately and from now on had no failures. For four years he conducted a Civil War. At the close of this terrible struggle he brought to this nation peace and to the North and South friendliness. To the slaves he gave freedom. He put his soul into putting the nation on a firm footing and a patriotic and friendly union in which the people could live in peace and again prosper. In our short history United States can give credit to many men but especially to two, George Washington the founder of our country, and Abraham Lincoln, the preserver and regenerator of America's Liberty.

Mr. and Mrs. Max Grimm of Gaston spent several days of last week visiting at the home of Mrs. Grimm's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Childs.

YOUR REWARD.

"How small the sphere in which I move," you say, And then with narrowed vision close the day And wonder why it is not yours to cast Your influence forth upon a world more vast.

You think of those who sway the public mind, Of those whose mighty deeds impress mankind, Of those who seek for earthly place and treasure And seem to gratify each whim and pleasure.

You think of those who travel far and wide, While you to home and irksome toil are tied, They speak their wish and always have their way, While you were taught to listen and obey.

Thus chafes your soul within your troubled breast, And thoughts of failure spoil your well earned rest, This should not be. Your life is your success, And your reward will greater be, not less.

If, faithful to your lowly calling true, You persevere and live the good life through, The Teacher saith, According as 'tis given So must each an accounting give in heaven.

The great reward is not unto the great, To him who walks on high or rides in state, He trembles on the brink of an abyss Where pride may lead the soul to step amiss.

Be not discouraged humble soul. Your task, Well done, is all your God can ask, And when at last the song of praise shall swell "How great!" will not be heard, 'twill be, "How well!"

Be patient then and count it joy to live, Expend each day the best that you can give, In lowly service, humble toil, you'll find The sweetest friendships, health and peace of mind.
