To Help Farmers

By C. E. Spence,
State Market Agent.

At a recent meeting of a number of Pendleton wheat growers to talk over the matter of selling or holding, one of the farmers offered this advice: "When wheat gets around $1.25 to the grower, it seems to me that it is the time to sell, not all, but a part of his crop. This is a fairly safe proposition for the grower either way the market goes. If it falls, he has played safe on a part of his crop; if it goes higher, he has half of his crop yet to sell and has not lost anything on the first deal. Then, too, this would do much to regulate the market and stabilize it. With half the crop held back, the speculators would not be able to pull off any very wild deals." If there were compact organization and cooperation with wheat growers, such general action would be a power for safe and profitable markets.

Wheat may go to $1.50 per bushel net to the farmers, as many of them expect it will, or a drop may come and farmers may again have to sell below the cost of production, but if every bushel harvested this year netted the farmer $1.50, the trouble with agriculture would not be cured. The trouble place is between the manufacturer and his workmen on one side and the farmer on the other. The cost of this middle road is too big, the farmers simply can't pay it and stay on the farms. There has got to be more than a high-price-of-wheat remedy. A retail market price of $3 for which the producer received but $1 is a load that is surely breaking his back. It is a system under which the farmer is asked to work for less and less so that a greater army of middle interests may live on the between-profits.

If farmers were as tightly organized as manufacturers they could speedily remedy this trouble, as many of the manufacturers are now doing. They could be their own middle men, their own wholesalers, brokers and commissions, and absorb the distributing profits. But the farmers are not so organized and it will be a long time before they will be, and until such time as agriculture is able to hold its own under the organization system, it would seem to be the duty of municipal, state and national governments to intervene and stop the exploitation.

The United States census bureau gave the total of Oregon farm mortgages as $51,999,178 in the year 1920. State Treasurer Jefferson Myers gives the total now as $98,000,000—an increase of $48,000,000 in four years, $12,000,000 a year. And in face of these figures men and money are working hard to defeat the law passed by the last legislature forbidding the manufacture of counterfeit butter in the state. "Dairying has been the straw that many of us farmers have held up on for some time past," writes a farmer to the state market agent, "and now they would take away a part of this profit for the benefit of one or two meat packing concerns which want to get big profits on a counterfeit butter by-product." Farmers should more realize the importance of beating this referendum on the oleo law—for it will mean a market for millions of pounds more of butter.—State Market Agent.

DAMASCUS BERRY MEN WILL MEET MONDAY

Everyone interested in berry culture invited to be present. The meeting place is located one-half mile south and one-half mile east of Wilson corners, and 3 miles west of Boring.
