

THREE-DAY CELEBRATION PLANNED AT MOLALLA

Molalla will stage a small Pendleton roundup this year in connection with its celebration of the Fourth on July 3, 4 and 5.

Ben Jorey, well known to Gresham people, will bring his rodeo features from Pendleton and the Umatilla Indians will add the wild and colorful characteristics of the roundup.

The celebration will be held under auspices of the Molalla firemen. B. F. Irvine, of the Oregon Journal, will be the orator of the day.

About a dozen firemen and business men of Molalla were in Gresham last Friday, decked out in bright colored shirts and cowboy hats, advertising their three-day celebration and inviting everybody to come.

BATTLESHIP OREGON WILL BE MUSEUM

The old war machine Oregon, now safely berthed at a permanent dock in Portland, will become a floating museum according to plans just proposed by the city council and approved by some members of the battleship commission.

Commissioner Barbur and Bigelow were named by Mayor Baker to work out some plan by which all of the historical relics in the city museum at the city hall and those of the state historical society now housed in the public auditorium can be moved to the battleship so these treasures may be housed in one place and be known more generally.

"There is plenty of room on the battleship for such a museum and people would see it there who never have heard of the museum at the city hall and many who have not seen the state society's exhibit also would get a chance to see all of these relics at the same time," says Mayor Baker.

THINK! Little editorials suggested by Arthur Brisbane and gathered from other sources to help you think on live issues of the day. Men to Rule Earth's Forces. The scientific person says "the recent terrific heat comes from spots on the sun, unusually fierce." Another says, "the heat travels north from tropical jungles, thanks to atmospheric conditions." Accidental conditions of the air lanes send us heat from the Equator. How soon shall we learn to do, for ourselves, what nature does fitfully and at the wrong time? Do you doubt that fully civilized men will transfer surplus heat from the Equator to the North pole? That will seem a modest accomplishment, some centuries hence. It seems difficult to us. But suppose you had predicted two hundred years ago that the lightning flashing in the sky, occasionally killing men, would be harnessed one day and made to run a washing machine, a fan or a carpet sweeper. Men will manage and direct the earth's heat as easily as they now direct heat from the furnace. Grandma's Younger Face. Coningsby Dawson, writer, mourns because women are set aside, "shelved," at an age when their brothers and husbands begin to be interesting. He says a woman is, or ought to be, "at the height of her charm after forty." Various things work against women and prevent their having ardent young admirers, as Ninon de l'Enclos had at the age of seventy. The children come too close together, in many cases, and that wears women out. Then, husbands are dull, and after a day's work their talk is frightfully tiresome. No food for the wife's mind. Also, women have lived on the earth for 500,000 years as drudges, with a small percentage kept as toys. They literally have not had a chance. But times and conditions are changing. Women vote, families are smaller, you cannot tell a woman from her granddaughter, when their backs are turned. And often, when they face you, one is about as young as the other, and the grandmother has, spiritually, the younger face. Tom Lee, negro boatman on the Mississippi, lived long before the world heard of him. The steamer Norman sank and he saved 30 lives. The "folks" collected money to buy him a house, much to his surprise. His performance seemed to him commonplace. "I kept going and coming," said he, "until I saved everybody I saw in the river. Then I went to the sand bar and built a fire." The world exists and life is made possible, thanks to the workers that "just keep going and coming."
