Labelled "Greatest"

Harold "Red" Grange, Illinois' great football star, lived up to all that had ever been written about him, in his first eastern football appearance. Every gridiron authority who saw him in action declared him to be "the greatest backfield star of the age."

Off the football field Grange is a quiet unassuming American college boy, seldom talking football and always agreeable. He turned down a $200,000 offer of a year's contract with a picture show concern, saying he wanted to finish his college work. He recently received an offer of $40,000 for three games with professional teams. If he accepts it will disqualify him for a part in the college games.

Diphtheria.
 What symptoms should lead you to suspect that a child has diphtheria? Diphtheria may be like a severe sore throat with small or large gray or white patches. These patches may appear not only on the tonsils, but also on the soft palate. A membrane on the soft palate is almost certainly diphtheria. With such a throat the person usually feels sick. Not only does the throat hurt, but there is usually weakness in the back, neck and muscles generally. The glands of the neck may be quite large and feel painful when touched. The patient may be feverish and delirious. Though the fever may not be high.

What causes diphtheria? The Klebs Loeffler or diphtheria bacillus.

How is it spread?
 By contact with the infected person or with articles which may have been contaminated by discharges from his nose and throat, or by contact with a diphtheria carrier.

In what part of the body is the disease located?
 In the nose and throat but the poison generated is absorbed into the body causing degeneration of muscular tissue, heart disease and paralysis. Membranous croup is a form of diphtheria involving the larynx.

At what age is diphtheria most likely to occur?
 In children under ten. More than 80 per cent of the deaths occur between the ages of one and five.

Is everyone susceptible to diphtheria?
 No, some people possess a natural immunity. Practically all children between the ages of six months and two years are susceptible.

Is there a way to tell whether a person is immune or not?
 Yes, a simple skin test called the Schick test will determine definitely whether or not a person is immune.

Can susceptible persons be rendered immune?
 Yes, by three injections of toxin-antitoxin.

When a person contracts diphtheria, what should be done?
 Antitoxin should be given immediately even before the diagnosis is certain. It can do no harm and it may save a life. Every person who has come in contact with the sick person should be given a prospective dose of antitoxin.

What is the difference between antitoxin and toxin-antitoxin?
 Antitoxin is given to persons ill with diphtheria and to those who come in contact with them. It gives immediate immunity for a short time only. Toxin-antitoxin is a mixture of diphtheria toxin and antitoxin given to the well person to protect him against diphtheria. Its action is slower, but when complete the individual is immune probably for life.

Why are cultures taken from the throats of children at the opening of school and during epidemics?
 Because this locates the diphtheria carriers. One per cent of school children are carriers. They spread the disease and should be immediately isolated, as they are a menace to the school.
