ADVERTISING Rates reasonable. Our representative will call. Entered as second-class matter March 3, 1911, at the Postoffice at Gresham, Oregon, under the Act of March 3, 1879.

TELEPHONE GROWTH OF 50 YEARS.

The first successful message spoken over the telephone occurred on March 10, 1876, in Boston. Dr. Alexander Graham Bell spoke to his assistant, Thomas A. Watson, in another part of the building. Watson heard and responded. Mr. Watson is still living.

On next Wednesday will be celebrated the fiftieth year of the telephone.

That the present almost universal use of the telephone in America and Europe is the result of only 50 years of growth since that first successful experiment seems incredible, but the fact remains. It has become indispensable in the business and social life of today, just as has the automobile which has advanced to about the same universality of use in slightly more than half the same number of years.

The telephone is still young but already the method is likely to be replaced by the wireless within a decade or two.

The local telephone company was organized in Gresham twenty years ago. It would be appropriate to congratulate the local company on the local growth as well as the general growth of the Bell telephone system over which it is possible to talk from Gresham to any point in the United States.

HONOR SUBSCRIBER RENEWS.

There are a few honor subscribers left of those who signed for the Outlook at the very beginning of the paper 15 years ago, charter members, so to speak, who have read it continuously throughout the years. One of these is J. H. Hoss, who has always been a loyal friend to the paper.

On last Wednesday, in spite of weakness due to continued illness, Mr. Hoss came to the Outlook office, insisting on personally paying his subscription, just as he has done on every March 3 since 1911.

The Outlook feels highly honored in having Mr. Hoss on its subscription list all these years and wishes him renewed health and strength.

What Happened to An Electric Iron.

(A true story.) It is always a good policy to turn off the electric iron when starting down town. The Outlook reporter is a sadder but wiser woman. It was a beautiful afternoon in early March, to be exact, Wednesday afternoon, March 3d. Mrs. Welch had been ironing and had some errands at the postoffice, grocery and various other places to perform before completing the ironing.

She had (past tense used advisedly) a beautiful electric iron. It shone. It sparkled. It glistened. (Notice all in the past tense). As before said, it was a beautiful afternoon. The sun was shining, birds were singing, in fact a most delightful afternoon for a walk.

So enticing was the weather, so enchanting the balmy air, she decided to make the stroll a leisurely one. She spent nearly an hour in the trip to and from her house near the high school, making one call at the home of a friend, in addition to the necessary visits at various business houses.

Upon her arrival at her residence, a peculiar odor filled the air. It might be anything between burnt orange and wood. Smoke was ascending from the table. The thing of beauty which was designed to be a joy forever was a blackened piece of metal, and while not worthless as an iron, will no longer receive unstinted polishing and care.

Moral: It is always a good plan to turn off the electric current to the iron before starting on a pleasure trip.

CARELESS DRIVING KEEPS UP RUBBER PRICES

"You are unnecessarily extravagant with a most essential commodity, are signs of the times that confront motorists who are vitally interested at the present time in the supply and price of rubber as manufactured into auto tires," is a warning note sounded by George O. Brandenburg, general manager of the Oregon State Motor association. "Such signs of the times are as conspicuous as signboards throughout the city and paved highways, but there is little regard paid them by those most vitally affected by the waste of so essential an article as rubber."

"These signs," according to Mr. Brandenburg, "are scrawled all over the pavements of all hard surfaced streets and highways. Wherever brakes are applied with sufficient severity to slide the wheels of an auto, long black lines are drawn out on the pavement for the entire distance traveled by the locked wheels. These lines are nothing more or less than rubber ground into the pavement as though the tires had been applied to an emery wheel. Such constant unnecessary wear on tires naturally results in tire replacements long before the tire should be changed if given a chance to deliver its maximum mileage.

"When tires have advanced in price by leaps and bounds, and when an attempt is being made to break the British monopoly on rubber that is responsible for the advances in price, motorists should be extremely careful in the operation of cars with a view of conserving rubber if not saving themselves material costs in their operations of automobiles. Sudden starting as well as sudden stopping are practices that unnecessarily wear the rubber tread from tires.

"Care should be used also in parking as much damage is done the side walls of tires when they are squeezed or chafed against curbs. The black lines on pavements are so noticeable that attention is called to the unnecessary grinding away of tires by practices that result in such hieroglyphics as sliding tires leave on the pavements. As a matter of conservation, the message I wish to leave with the motorists is: 'If you must get artistic on our pavements, use a brush and a bucket of paint. They are much cheaper.'"

HIKING.

The trail went winding up a thousand feet and dipped and sagged and wobbled here and there. Exposed me to the glaring summer heat. And sprayed with dust the "balmy mountain air."

A couple tons of lead were in my pack. The muscles of my body all were sore. And if it chanced I ever could get back my hiking would be done at home, I swore. But months have passed and I am home once more. Breathing the stifling, fetid city air. With clouds of people clacking past my door. And loud, discordant noises everywhere.

So I am getting all prepared to slip away and take a good long hiking trip. Charles T. Hickey in March Sunset.
