In Oregon keen interest has been aroused in the state-wide debating contests, in which scores of granges will participate, with some lively debates in many sections of the state during the coming months. The question for debate will be, "Resolved, that the federal government should not begin the development of any new reclamation projects until there is a demand for agricultural products at a price that will pay cost of production plus a reasonable profit." These debates are to be conducted under strict rules of uniformity and will be heard by large grange audiences, with the public invited to attend in many instances.
