THE FARMER.

If there is one calling which has a higher claim than another upon the helpful consideration of the state it is that of the farmer," said Otto H. Kahn in an address recently.

"The farmer's problem is part of our problem." This the banker, the manufacturer, the business man, or the laborer can truthfully say.

The life of the agriculturist was never more attractive than it is today, unless we go back to the conditions of the simple life when wants were few, money counted for little, and the purpose of the farmer was to provide for himself and family the necessities and comforts of a home.

In the last 25 or 50 years conditions have materially changed. The same things no longer satisfy. Conditions of living have improved and education has increased the knowledge of and longing for better things. The simple life has passed. The home must have modern comforts, the buildings must be modern, machinery must relieve the tediousness and drudgery of work, more things for the farm home must be bought and the prices are higher. The farmer must travel more. Taxes are higher and a whole lot of things have come about to make the farmer and his family desire and need more money. Yet the prices of what he has to sell have not increased in proportion to the demands he faces and desires to meet for the comfort and advancement of himself and wife and children.

The farming business is the largest in the country. It is the hardest to organize for its self protection. The farmer is at the mercy of both the buyer and the seller. He has to take what he can get and has to pay what others demand. His products are more or less perishable. He must sell often at a disadvantage. He cannot control the conditions of his crop production. He must wait often many months to realize on his investment of money and labor and then often meet with disappointment and loss.

All about him he sees others realize a larger and surer return on their labor and investments.

No wonder the farmer feels more or less keenly dissatisfied with his lot. He sees other interests demand and get legislative protection or relief and such for him while ever being agitated seems as far off as ever. He can't quit, he can't strike. His problem is really hard to handle. There are many theories regarding relief but they all end in talk or printed matter and aid the politician more than the farmer.

Why could not the agricultural colleges of the land, of which nearly every state has one, get together to work out a really practical solution of the farmers' problems? They have done much for the farmers of their respective states and localities but have they tried by a conference and united effort to decide on the best and most practical relief and put it into effect not in localities alone but generally throughout the country? Would it not be worth while?

SWIMMING THE CHANNEL.

Three times during the past month of August the English channel has been swum. Two of the successful swimmers were women and American women at that. The third success was achieved by a German. There have been several other recent attempts.

The name of Gertrude Ederle of New York will go down in the history of unusual and daring achievements as the first woman to accomplish the feat. She is 19 years old.

The second woman, Mrs. Corson, also of New York, is older than Miss Ederle and while not having the distinction of being the first to swim the channel is hailed as the first mother to do so, she having two children. Her swim, however, was not as good as Miss Ederle's.

Not much is said of the German although he is said to have beaten all previous records as to time. About a dozen persons have swum the English channel to date. It is regarded as the severest test of endurance to which a swimmer can subject himself.

We expect to hear more of Miss Ederle and Mrs. Corson, as challenges are being offered for other long distance swimming tests, as for instance around Manhattan island and from the main land to Catalina island.

We have reason to be proud of our American women athletes. They have the spirit and ambition to succeed. They show the superior training and endurance. The two mentioned are outstanding examples but they should be an incentive and inspiration to athletic young people to perfect themselves in swimming and other accomplishments.

Swimming the channel and other long distance swims are likely to become more common. It is only reasonable to believe there are many others, both men and women, who can do as Miss Ederle has done—and they will.

Swimming should be a common recreation. It is one of the most healthful exercises for young people and men and women of middle age.

A good community investment would be a swimming tank.

Swimming.

This is the season when swimming takes its place as the leading outdoor sport. Swimming is the most healthful and by far the most refreshing of sports. Few persons, however, attempt to acquaint themselves with the sanitary environment of the water in which they swim. When in doubt, it is a wise rule to stay out of the water. Swimming places in streams should not be exposed to the discharge of raw sewage. The presence of garbage, refuse or waste is evidence of contamination sufficiently great to warrant the exclusion of bathers.

The water in artificial pools should be kept as pure as possible by filtration, sterilization and change, or by a combination of these processes. Every person should refrain from entering water when he is not well. A common cold, a skin eruption, an inflammation of the eye, ear, nose, or throat, or fever should be sufficient to deter a person from entering a swimming place.

When a swimmer comes to a realization that the prevention is a matter of mutual concern, just that soon will pink eye, sinus infection, and other disagreeable and serious infections be greatly reduced in number. The practice of spitting into the water is reprehensible. Care should be taken not to pass water into or out of the mouth or swallow the fluid lest intestinal infection occur. It is well for both men and women to wear rubber caps which will prevent the entrance of water into the ears. This simple precaution may prevent inflammation of the middle ear. It is best not to enter the water when overheated. Failure to observe this rule may cause cramps. Then, too, it is unwise to swim until two hours after eating. Every one who swims should know how to protect himself while in the water, and also be familiar with life saving methods. Diving in shallow water, unnecessarily long swims beyond reach of assistance, and swimming beneath objects are acts of poor judgment. Swimming is a sport to be encouraged because of its value as exercise and diversion. A casual swimmer soon discovers unused muscles and finds himself breathing more deeply than has been his custom. It is an exercise not limited to age, being available to the elderly as well as to the young. Provided you have no organic impairment, it reacts well to the hardy exercise of the bowels.

To the mentally and physically tired, swimming acts as an extirminator of fatigue products, planting in their stead a feeling of well-being and exhilaration. It is distinctly a sport worth cultivating.

Poison Oak.

There is one plant that heralds the approach of cooler weather quicker than all other vegetation native to the state of Oregon. The leaves of poison oak or rhus, diversiloba are usually the first to change color. The poison oak plant is perhaps most frequently encountered by the unsuspecting city visitor to the country. Yet it may be distinguished easily from other plants by its shiny leaves which are grouped in threes. Two of the leaves are opposite and short stalked, while the middle leaf is long stalked. It grows as a short shrub or small tree. Its berries are smooth and greenish, which later turn to a yellowish white. These distinguished marks, if borne in mind, will protect the vacationist from poison oak.

Poisoning usually occurs as a result of actual contact with some part of the plant. It is possible, however, that a person can be poisoned by the leaf hairs or pollen of the plant if only a short distance from it. The poison is also spread by burning the shrub. While many people can wander at will through a growth of poison oak without danger, there are some people who are highly susceptible to the poison.

If you have come in contact with poison oak, one of the surest and best ways to prevent the eruption is to use soap and warm water, for the poison requires some time to penetrate the skin. A stiff brush should not be used as this might tend to drive the poisonous material farther into the skin. Use a heavy lather and continue washing for almost four or five minutes with pledgets of cloth or gauze—discarding each in turn. Change the water frequently or use running water. Repeat the process in four or five hours.

The symptoms of poison oak are comparatively easy to recognize. A more or less mild attack may be ushered in by a burning and itching of the skin. Within 24 hours after the skin is exposed to the poison a red rash appears. This is followed by more or less swelling and itching, then small blisters filled with serum make their appearance. The irritation of the eruption may be allayed by immersing the inflamed surface in a solution of hypochlorite of soda in the proportion of two tablespoons to the quart of water. Warm solution of borie acid or common salt or baking soda may be used to relieve the irritation.

Favorable reports on the use of extracts of poison oak for the prevention and treatment of this form of skin inflammation have been made by a number of physicians. A bad case of poison oak always requires the attention of a physician. In any case if the infection causes fever, pain or headache, it is much safer to call a physician.
