"The Wanderlust"

Did you ever feel THAT SOMETHING stirring in you, along in springtime, along about the first of May? When the grass has just got started and you go about your labors in a listless darn half-hearted sort of way? Did you ever long to feel your hands upon the wheel of some good car, to just ride and ride? On some trail that's leading o'er the mountain, hill or valley, just to see what's on the other side? Along some trail that's leading nowhere, yet in fancy anywhere you want to go? Leading you to strange and unfamiliar places—that's the Wanderlust and it's calling you to go. Calling you to come and follow, with a voice that won't be still. From the forest, lake and river, from the mountain, vale and hill. Once the Wanderlust starts calling it will never be denied. 'Til all summer days are ended and the last lone man has died.
