Hood trip far surpassed anything they had seen in California.

Following a "Mountain Carnival" at the city of Hood River on Friday, July 15th, the Hood River Post of the American Legion will stage the annual Mount Hood Legion climb on Saturday and Sunday, July 16th and 17th.

To the annual mid-summer recreational venture, launched by the Hood River Legion Post in 1921 and which has become nationally known in mountaineering and Legion circles, several unique features will be added this year.

The ascent of the peak will be held on Saturday, and on Sunday, when parties will be escorted to glacial ice and snow fields, the Legionnaires will stage a race to the top of Mount Hood and back and hold a ski jumping contest on Coalman's Scoot, natural ski run on the north side of the peak.

The Crag Rats, mountaineering organization, whose members won note in the discovery last year of Jackie Strong, lost on the rugged southwest slopes of Hood, and the first of this year rescued Calvin White from a winter blizzard on Hood, will guide the summit and glacier parties.

Except for a fee of $2 to be charged those essaying the summit trip, in order to provide a fund for the purchase of ropes and to provide other accessories for safety and comfort of climbers, every service of the Legion Post this year will be provided free of charge.

The Hood River Post inaugurated the Mount Hood Climb, in order to popularize mountaineering among the folk of Oregon, and a cordial invitation is extended to the general public to attend this year's mountain party.

COTTRELL

Plans are being made to construct an auditorium in the unfinished upper story of the Cottrell schoolhouse and lumber is on the ground for that purpose. The auditorium is greatly needed as a place to hold Parent-Teacher association meetings, picture shows and other entertainments. The P.-T. A. as a body is greatly appreciative of the patronage given them in the series of dances to raise money for that purpose, also for the donations of cash. The committee in charge deserves much credit for the interest shown.
