O. S. C. or O. A. C.

Hugh Hume, editor of The Spectator, a Portland magazine, commenting on the change from O. A. C. to O. S. C., notes that journalistic opinion is about evenly divided on the subject. He also brings out the fact that of more than 3500 students in the "agricultural" college only 315 are taking the agricultural course...

The Outlook agrees with the general idea of the Spectator that the change, omitting the designation agricultural from the name, may lead taxpayers to ask why two state institutions so near in place and so alike in courses of study...

A publicity item is headed "70,000 in One City Playing Harmonica." What a sweet and harmonious place that must be! Anyway, there's nothing like being united on something.
