Attention is called to the splendid article by Mr. Aldrich on Alaska, recording the facts about that interesting part of our United States as gathered and observed by him on a recent visit to Alaska. It is not only a credit to the writer as an observing and thoughtful traveler but is informative on the things all should know.

Though never a resident of eastern Multnomah, Penumbra Kelly, who died in Portland on March 12, was well known throughout the county. He had lived in Portland for many years and for half a century was chieftain of the Kelly clan. Mr. Kelly's career in public office included four terms in the state legislature, three terms as sheriff and he was United States marshal under the Arthur administration. Emmet Kelly, of Gresham, is a member of the Kelly clan.

With this issue of the Outlook Emma B. Johnson, linotyper, completes her 17th year with the twice-a-week paper which had then been published only three weeks. This is a lengthy time of service and it has been highly capable and faithful. The versatile machine she operates today is the third owned and used by the Outlook since its humble beginning March 3, 1911, and is as different from the first as the fine auto of today differs from that of 1911. And a second linotype is also at the operator's disposal whenever quantity or character of work requires. Without these composing machines the Outlook would require ten or twelve hand compositors and tons of type for the present newspaper and other publications and work so quickly handled by a skillful operator on a machine.

FORMER MOUNTAIN GUIDE PASSES AT 86

The death on Monday at Dayton, Oregon, of Oliver Cooper Yokum, at 86 years, takes from earth a man of splendid character, long intimately associated with Mt. Hood as guide and hotel owner, and well known to the older residents of Gresham, Sandy, Portland and all this part of Oregon.

He came to Oregon in an emigrant train when a small boy in 1847. The family settled in Yamhill county and Oliver later moved to Portland where he conducted a photograph gallery. His health became impaired and an outdoor occupation was imperative. He had visited Mt. Hood many times and his love for the mountain led him to locate at Government Camp, where he spent many years and engaged in early mountain activities which have developed into the accommodations and attractions of more recent years.

Yokum falls and Yokum ridge were named in his honor.

A record says that Yokum moved to Government Camp in 1890 where for 22 years he made his home, guided hundreds of parties to the summit of the mountain, lived a strenuous, happy and useful life. Being a photographer, it is said he took the first known photographs at the summit of the mountain in July, 1883, when he made his first ascent.

Those of the younger generation who motor to the mountain now over a splendid highway and climb over well defined trails can not realize what the trip to the mountain meant over the old trails. But the mountain climbers of that day were no less ardent in their love of the mountain.

Great Opportunities Found in Alaska

the city. Stewart was on his way out, bound for Seattle.

In the evening Stewart called for his "poke" and was met by "Soapy" who demanded, it is said: "Who are you? We never saw you before. Get the hell out of here." Stewart went immediately to Reid, and Reid organized the next day a vigilance committee, and armed himself with two 45 caliber colt revolvers. The committee met on the wharf July 8, 1898.

One of Smith's henchmen learned of the meeting and notified "Soapy" who was in his saloon. Smith had previously broken up several vigilance committee meetings.

The desperado took several drinks, removed from the wall back of the bar a cavalry carbine and started for the wharf. Reid guarded the entrance. When Smith appeared Reid shouted a challenge, and warned him what would happen if he put his feet on the pier. To this Smith paid no attention and walked straight on to the wharf. Reid at once fired two shots almost simultaneously and the bullets struck "Soapy" in the chest. He fell backward at the impact, but recovered, dropped on one knee, leveled his carbine at Reid, and fired. The bullet tore a large hole in Reid's abdomen. Both men fell. Reid was rushed to a hospital unconscious and died in three weeks.

Not one of Smith's henchmen came to his rescue and he died alone where he fell, hammering the planks with his arms. His body was wrapped in a mackinaw blanket and buried. A wooden slab marks his grave. Reid's funeral was the largest ever held in Skagway, and to his memory a suitable monument has been erected and these words are chiseled thereon "He gave his life for the honor of Skagway."

Alaskan Scenery Magnificent.

Much has justly been said about the wonderful scenery in this part of our country and some would have you believe that the mountains, streams, and glaciers surpass in beauty and grandeur everything of like nature in this great world of ours.

In a large degree I think this is true. But perhaps some of these enthusiastic writers have never viewed the Kunchinjuga group of the Himalayan mountains at the break of day—when the sun early casts its rays on the white pinnacles of this towering chain—when the gray dawn is lifted—when the gold and crimson glow enshrouds the spires of the most gigantic wall of perpetual snow on earth.

While the coloring in Alaska quite equals that in India one must remember that the Alaska range is the highest on the American continent only and that the Himalayan mountains of India surpass them in height by nearly two miles. The mountains of Alaska, however, overtop Mount Blanc, the Matterhorn, or the Jungfrau. The sweep of Mount St. Elias (nearly 19,000 feet) is from ocean to sky, and presents a delightful contrast to the Himalayas, the Andes and others which rise from lofty inland plateaus. The reflection of this giant mountain in the ocean when the water is placid and its crest colored by the evening sun, presents a beautiful picture.

Yukon River Most Scenic.

On the subject of rivers, however, the mighty Yukon has to be reckoned with, and it is truly one of the largest and most scenic on the American continent. It is formed at Fort Selkirk, Yukon Territory, Canada, by the junction of the Lewes and Pelly rivers, flows northwest into Alaska, and empties into the Behring Sea. Its total length, including the Lewes and Teslin is about 2,300 miles, and it drains an area of over 330,000 square miles. Its volume of discharge is considered about two-thirds that of the Mississippi and the force of the current is such that ten miles out from its principal mouth the water is fresh.

One cannot properly appreciate Alaska and the beauties of this river without sailing down at least 1,300 miles over its placid but occasionally turbulent surface and beholding the ever changing pictures along its course. Great vistas of rolling hills, some barren, and others heavily wooded, bathed in radiant colors; towering mountains and high rocks rising from the water's edge all open to view in June the 24 hours 'round by the grace of that mighty agency—the sun at midday, the sun at midnight.
