NOT SO BAD.

The editor is "called down" for a statement recently to the effect that Gresham grange could do a community service by improving its sidewalk on Powell street. Investigation shows that we were off, at least so far as the local grange is concerned, as the walk in front of the hall is in good shape.

Not only has the grange looked after its sidewalk but in recent months great improvements have been made to the hall, inside and outside, including building a new stage with curtain, outside painting, etc. We are informed the grangers will plant flowers and set out shrubbery this spring.

This is commendable and we'll say others should profit by the example and go and do likewise.

THINKS CITY WELL WOULD BE MISTAKE

Gresham, Oregon, March 22, 1928.—Editor Gresham Outlook:—Only last week a man came from Sheridan seeking a home here. The first question he asked was, "Have you Bull Run water?" We were ashamed to tell him we have, but they are asking us to exchange it for a well.

We would like to see the figures on the cost of pumping water several hundred feet out of a well.

We believe we would be taking chances of the water being contaminated and would be subject to various troubles with upkeep of the system, which we do not have with our Bull Run gravity system which will soon extend from Mt. Hood all over the Willamette valley.

Gresham, the beautiful, nestled between a great city and a great, towering, snow-capped mountain. Let us all think twice before we fail to pay the price for Gresham's greatest asset, Bull Run water!

Great Opportunities Found in Alaska

investment, please remember, of $7,200,000. Add interest at 6 per cent to this seven million for 60 years makes our investment $33,120,000 or a profit of $1,303,880,000.

It seems to have been the practice thus far, owing to the immense natural resources, constantly to take out, and put little or nothing back to build up permanently this vast territory.

Possibilities in Agriculture Great.

In Alaska there are great possibilities in agriculture, which is the backbone, so to speak, of all great countries, or, as Webster once said, "The farmers are the founders of civilization." I wish to quote from M. D. Snodgrass, agronomist in charge of the United States Agricultural experiment station, Matanusk, Alaska, under four headings:

First—Crops. "With the exception of alfalfa and corn all crops that grow in western Washington such as peas, vetches, oats, spring wheat, barley, rye, potatoes, mangles, rutabagas, turnips, carrots, parsnips, beets, cabbage, cauliflower, and lettuce do well. In fact all common garden crops are successfully grown. Small bush and vine fruits are highly successful."

Second—Markets "The local market for butter, cheese, eggs, pork, mutton, and beef is now largely supplied from Seattle. There are as yet no creameries or packing houses here. More than $5,000,000 worth of food products are annually imported by Alaska which can be produced in the territory."

Third—Taxes. "There are no land or personal property taxes and none are expected until the territory becomes a state. A school tax of $5 per year is collected from males up to 50 years of age, and is the only direct tax. District schools are established wherever there are eight children of school age."

Fourth—Climate. "The climate is suitable for farming and stock raising. Poultry, hogs, sheep, and goats and cattle do well in this climate."

The central area comprising the great valley of the Yukon and Tanana is protected on the south by the lofty Alaska range, and with its extensive snow fields supplies an abundance of water.

The average precipitation ranges from only 13 to 20 inches. The thermometer in summer often climbs to 90 degrees F. in the shade, and occasionally higher, the average summer temperature, however, is about 58 degree F. and the low temperature is only slightly less than in southern Alaska. I wish now to compare Alaska with other northern countries.

Comparisons Cited.

Norway, Sweden, and Finland are in the same latitude as Alaska and quite similar in climate. They have a combined area only two-thirds as great. They support a population around 11,000,000. These lands have no mineral wealth except iron and not nearly the area of tillable land nor wealth in fisheries. Let us now consider Finland alone which is only one-fourth the size of Alaska and had a population in 1909 of over three million.

The total value of her products in 1920 was 79 million and consisted principally of the following: 20 million bushels of oats, 12 million bushels of rye, nearly five million bushels of barley, over 19 million bushels of potatoes, 26½ million pounds of butter and around three million pounds of flax and hemp. The number of domestic animals was cattle, 1,500,000; sheep, 90,000,000; swine, 222,000; and 328,000 horses. The same year (1920) the total value of Alaska's products amounted to $75,306,986, made up principally of minerals, fish, and furs and the population was less than 55,000.

To recapitulate, Finland, a country quite similar to Alaska, had a population of three million and the value of her products was 79 million, while Alaska had a population of only 55,000 and the value of her products was nearly as great. It therefore takes little figuring to realize the possibilities in Alaska when we consider that her coal, oil fields ,timber lands, and farming country have hardly been scratched.

Or to state it in the form of a question: If little Finland can support three million people largely from her agricultural products, how many souls can Alaska support with an equally good agricultural area, with 75 million thrown in yearly as a bonus?

The government maintains an agricultural experiment station at Fairbanks and I saw on exhibition there grains and vegetables that would be considered extra fancy in a much warmer country. Potatoes eight and ten inches long, peas with pods 4½ inches long; a cabbage weighing 31 pounds that would fill a small size wash tub; beets, carrots, and turnips in proportion. At the hotel in Skagway the landlady brought me in a dish of raspberries that she had grown in her back yard and they were so large that I mistook them (until I had tasted) for loganberries. I might add that the flavor of these berries and also the vegetables, was excellent The soil around Skagway is almost black and apparently very rich. In one flower garden I measured sweet peas 9½ feet tall and a dahlia 11 inches in diameter.

Homestead Privileges.

"Most of the homesteads are located in the Matanuska and Sustina valleys in the Cook's Inlet region or in the Tanana valley near Fairbanks. The settler may locate 160 acres and must pay the cost of surveying unless the government has previously surveyed the land. For farming purposes he cannot encroach upon reservations, mineral land, missions, or hot springs. Residence must be established within six months and cultivation must be started on at least 10 acres the second year and 20 acres the third year. At the end of the third year proof must be filed and fee of $25 or $50 paid according to conditions. One is not precluded from filing even though he or she has taken up a homestead in the states.

One thing that should be overcome as far as possible is the transient population. The native Indians are slack, slovenly, indolent, and unreliable, and the esquimaux live largely in mud huts and eke out a mere existence by trapping and hunting.

In order to carry on the extensive fishing and mining industries Philipino and transient labor from Seattle and Portland are employed.

This class spends little money in Alaska but brings it out and spends it in the coast cities during the winter.

Then too we must consider that the mines and fisheries are owned largely by outside capital and the profits derived therefrom are distributed among stockholders in the states, consequently little, at the present time, returns to build up this vast empire. It appears to me, therefore, that the government should encourage farming and dairying in every way possible, also the building of canneries to preserve milk, berries and vegetables. There should be established saw and pulp mills on a much larger scale than exists today. And whenever cattle and sheep raising is carried on commercially woolen and shoe factories should be built. Industries that ought to do well at the present time are beet sugar factories, creamery and cheese plants. Alaska beets contain a larger percentage of sugar than beets grown in the states and can be worked during winter months without refrigeration, which is very desirable.

The residents of Alaska import practically all that they consume except potatoes, salmon and wild meat. For example, at every hotel and restaurant at which I stopped, Bordens, Carnation, or some other brand of canned milk was served in original cans for one's coffee. Practically every article in the big "N C" stores in the grocery, dry goods, clothing, and boot and shoe departments is shipped from Seattle, excepting, however, canned salmon, potatoes and a few fresh vegetables in season.

One can readily understand that if a major portion of the articles consumed in Alaska was produced or manufactured in the territory it would not only give employment to a large number and hold the population intact the year 'round but a portion of the wealth gathered within the territory would be there spent for the up-building and advancement of Alaska itself.

I wish in conclusion to add here that during my 30 days stay in Alaska I never met a more hospitable band of people, and never was more kindly treated, and I wish to pay my respects to such broad gauge men as E. H. Parsons of Nenanna, auditor of the Northern Commercial company; Thos. P. McLain, sheriff of Circle; Jess Rust, my guide and hunting partner; William Hunter, and C. Clausen of Fairbanks and many others whom I wish some day to see again.
