Fire Under Control by Strenuous Work

After two or three days and nights of strenuous efforts, the fire which burned meadows, brush and green timber on the Cavanagh, Cowan and Hall farms northeast of Gresham, has been brought under control.

Early Friday forenoon the members of the Gresham Fire department were called out to help fight the fire. Neighbors assisted and in the afternoon about a hundred boys from the high school were dismissed and did heroic service.

Fred Powell was at Pendleton when the fire broke out and did not return to his home in Portland until Sunday morning, when he came out immediately to do what he could.

E. G. Lewis and family occupy the Fred Powell home, and E. Hara, a Japanese lessee, and family occupy a small house on Mrs. Carrie Powell's farm.

Figures Throw Light on Political Problem

The Tabulations.

The tabulations given herewith will enable the readers of the Outlook to answer many questions which will come forward during the present political campaign.

How many electoral votes must a successful candidate for the presidency obtain? How many electoral votes has Oregon? Which state has the smallest number of electoral votes? Which state has the largest number of electoral votes?

The reader can entertain himself by grouping states which he thinks will vote for his favorite candidate for president so that the candidate may receive a majority of electoral votes.

Solidarity of Party Vote.

(W. W. Williams)

An analysis and tabulation of the popular vote and the results in each state for the past eight presidential elections furnishes important information and reliable data to forecast the future.

The great outstanding fact in the above tabulation is the increase in popular vote with the enfranchisement of women and the equivalent increase in the vote of the republican party.

Another interesting conclusion can also be drawn and which is more significant than the other. The democrats did not hold the vote of wives and sisters, for surely 16,000 increase would not account for all the wives of over nine million democrats of the former election.

The last election shows a loss of less than a half a million by the republican and three-fourths of a million by the democrats.

In 1908 when each was elected to the presidency. The solidarity of the vote of each party in defiance to drift or shift could not be better illustrated than in the vote of 1912.

Can Smith Win? This is the first time that the two major parties have the field to themselves—the solidarity of one party against the other.

The winning party this year must secure 266 electoral votes.

Party and Popular Vote by Years.

Increase in Population The increase in population in the United States from 1890 is shown by the following figures taken from the federal census: 1890, 62,947,714; 1900, 75,995,575; 1910, 91,972,266; 1920, 105,710,620; 1928—Estimated—120,000,000.

a good reason. The traditions of the democratic party are not such as to appeal to woman's vote. The protective instincts of women rebel against slavery, free trade and any modification of the prohibition amendment.

The vote of the endorsement of the republican party by the women of this country is also a vote of protest against the democratic party. Tammany Hall and state local option are as repulsive to their feminine instincts as slavery and free trade.

The solidarity now stands from gradual and consistent evolution, two to one. Time and again this solidarity has been attacked but to no avail.

FARM HOUSE BURNED DURING HIGH WIND

Fanned by a strong east wind last Saturday, fire which had been set to burn brush on the farm of G. W. Woodward, 3 1/2 miles east of Gresham on the Section Line road, spread rapidly and destroyed the Woodward farm house, some small outbuildings and all their contents.

The fire which burned the buildings was set west of the house but it burned so rapidly in all directions that it was soon out of control.

Only through the strenuous efforts of neighbors and passers-by, was the property of John Strebin saved. Fire caught on the roof of the barn and two small holes were burned, but it was beaten out and quenched with water.
