ARE you reading the history now running serially in advertisement form in Collier's, Saturday Evening Post and other national magazines of the building of the Union Pacific?

Union Pacific is a national achievement upon which depended the safety of the Union and the holding of the Pacific States.

The stories are rich in intimate facts of United States history. When you read them you will realize what a great part Union Pacific played in the growth and welfare of our Nation; and how truly serviceable Union Pacific is and will be—in peace or war—to the people of our United States, as individual travelers, or shippers, and as a Nation.

MAKING A SOLDIER.

Some Questions With Answers by the Writer Who Asks Them.

Gentle reader, if you are a young man of military age do you feel that you could stand in your place in a squad trench and do your duty as musketeers and other peasants of monarchial Europe have frequently done? My own opinion of you is that you could not, and my opinion has the strength of a conviction. I do not care whether you are a clerk or a college professor, a lawyer or a laborer.

Supposing you were advancing in open order of attack and had reached a point where, with your captain killed, your platoon commander wounded, your line, unable to go forward, was lying in the open and your only chance for life was to find the range of the enemy and shoot at him so correctly that he in turn could no longer shoot correctly at you. Would you listen to the orders of your corporal? Would you take the range he gave you, carefully adjust your sight and fire every shot as carefully as if you were trying to ring a cane at Coney Island or make a new step in a dance?

No; you could not do it, and, failing to do it, you would be killed by some peasant of the type that you see working on the railroad track or mixing concrete for the foundation of the road on which you run your automobile and upon whom you look as hardly human. He is a better soldier than you are.—Robert R. McCormick in Century Magazine.

CACODYL IS NO PERFUME.

On the Contrary, It Has the Vilest of All Vile Drug Odors.

The vilest smelling drug known to the chemists is called cacodyl. It is a combination of one atom of arsenic with two atoms of methyl. It was first made in 1760 by Cadet de Gassicourt, but Bunsen gave it its name, which has three roots—cac, meaning vile; od, emitting odor, and yl, substance, the substance emitting a vile odor.

Dr. Douglass W. Montgomery of San Francisco has this to say about it in the Journal of the American Medical Association:

"Our forefathers imagined sulphur compounds to be the worst smelling things and so, in creating a haze, plentifully supplied it with them. In comparison, however, with the productions of modern chemists the sulphur compounds of our forefathers are as attar of roses, and from this one may imagine what a substance must smell like when a chemist such as Bunsen would feel impelled to baptize it with the name cacodyl.

Cacodyl combined with iron or sodium—iron, or sodium, cacodylate—is sometimes given in cases of profound anaemia, but it makes the breath and skin emit a strong odor resembling that of garlic.

Parental Conscience.

"My boy Josh has got me kind o' worried," said Farmer Cornstossel. "Ain't he beavin'?" asked the neighbor. "I hadn't thought about that. What I'm wonderin' is whether I kin spruce up an' be the kind of a father he thinks he's entitled to."—Washington Star.

Goethe on Books.

It is with books as with new acquaintances. At first we are delighted if we find we agree in a general way, if we feel a friendly influence upon any of the chief sides of our existence. It is only upon closer acquaintanceship that the points of difference become apparent, and then the value of reasonable conduct lies not in shrinking back at once, as is often the case with children, but in holding fast to the things in which we agree and arriving at a clear understanding about the things in which we differ, without on that account wishing to come to an agreement upon them.—Goethe.

A Cargo Hard to Handle.

Asphalt is said to be the most difficult cargo for a vessel to unload. The asphalt is taken out of the asphalt lakes in Trinidad in a semifluid state and by the time the vessel reaches a northern port has hardened, so that to unload it it is necessary for the men to go into the hold and dig it out with pick and shovel. This takes time, and a vessel carrying such cargo always has to arrange for a considerable stay in port.
