LACONICS

Whether recorded or not, what has been done at the close of a day is history, but what will be done tomorrow is merely speculation.

Even if you lose it is more honorable to go as far as you can in the right direction than it is to override your conception of right or fail to do your duty.

Of course there are exceptions, but generally if a man is industrious mentally he is lazy physically. To exercise both faculties at the same time he considers working overtime.

One who is addicted to a habit may quit the habit if not coerced, but as soon as force is brought to bear on him he rebels and looks upon the pressure as meddling with his individuality.

Should a man tell a falsehood that would cause mischief he would be considered an undesirable citizen, but to tell one for money these days it would, it seems, be considered only a matter of business.

A man who is not selfish is a non-entity to himself and to those depending upon him, but to possess too much of it he loses the encouragement he so much needs from the good wishes of his fellow men.—Exchange.

TEXAS TIPS

Sometimes we are so anxious that everybody have work we are almost willing to work less ourself.

Also it is a good idea for a man to choose a tall washerwoman, so she can't wear his socks to advantage.

Another reason why we would hate to work at a natatorium is because we would rather remember ladies by their faces.

Advice to June brides: If you are weak enough to permit your husband to wash the supper dishes, it may not be long till he is cooking his own breakfast.

One of the strangest things in this world is how many pieces a restaurant man can cut a watermelon into and still keep a bit of red on each fragment.

A West Dallas widow says that the latest proposal she has had was from an Oak Cliff horse doctor, who said he had admired her ever since he used to treat her first husband for blind staggers.—Dallas News.
