The cows are listed in the order of total value of butterfat and milk. The weighted butterfat of butterfat produced during the lactation and age hands. The butterfat was valued at 91 cents per pound and the skim at 91 cents per hundred pounds. The contest this year was exceptionally strong argument systematic testing. It is significant although there were seven registered cows entered in the contest of them won money by a margin of the first five cows. A registered cow has better chances of being a high producer because she is from known and selected ancestry, but that she is registered is not alone enough to prove her a productive cow—she must also be tested. An instance of the lack of knowledge of a cow's real production was brought out when one of the dairymen intended to enter only one of his cows, but brought another "along for company" to the first cow. The "company" registered cow won a higher place than the grade he had entered for competition.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

The high school students were hosts to their parents and a number of friends Friday evening of last week at the Auditorium. The first part of the entertainment was the five-reel picture "America's Answer," which was enjoyed by all. Then came games and folk dances, and a delicious lunch served by the girls was the climax to a very pleasant evening.

Teachers and pupils enjoyed the day of rest and recreation Tuesday—Armistice Day.

The high school students are having military drill occasionally out of doors to supplement the work in physical training.

Miss Smiley, the county health nurse, is in Hermiston examining the children as to their health, eyesight, physical defects, and then reporting the results to the parents. Miss Smiley addressed the Parent-Teachers meeting at the high school Thursday and explained her work to the mothers and teachers.

Miss Bertha McKeen, student of the high school, taught the first and second grades in Columbia district school Wednesday of this week.

Miss Beulah Scott has again regained her health so that she can return to her duties as teacher of the second and third grades.

B. Signs; Cooperative Marketing, A. Skovbo; Livestock Improvement, E. K. Mulkey; Farm Records, A. L. Larsen; Good Roads, Ray Brown.

WHAT THE SCHOOLS AIM TO DO

(By Principal M. B. Signs)
The three objects of the modern school system are to give the child first, general education and mental training; second, to develop occupational efficiency; and third, to inculcate a sense of duty and ability to perform the duties of civic responsibility. These all furnish power to the children, and a fourth object should be added that this power may not be abused, namely, moral character development, inculcating the principles of virtue, truth, honesty, industry, perseverance, reliability, and a strong sense of duty.

The first and the last have long been held up as the principal objects of school work, but now the modern school is adding and emphasizing especial training in vocational subjects and practice, as well as strong training in citizenship and civic responsibility. It has become recognized as the bounden duty of school authorities to provide for such training in the small towns and rural communities, so that children remote from the great centers of learning may not suffer thereby. When one stops to think that only five per cent of pupils ever get to college the other 95 per cent are entitled to have the best brought to their doors regardless of a few cents or even dollars added to the individual tax. Commerce, agriculture, shop work, student control of activities, cooking, sewing, library practice, teacher training and similar subjects are now being recognized as the subjects which should be added to the classical curriculum to give students practical knowledge of vocations. The Smith-Hughes act probably offers the best opportunity for schools to establish these lines of work, especially agriculture, shop work, and home economics, for upon the provision of certain equipment and facilities by the district the government will pay half the salary of the instructor in the above subjects.

Semi-annual nominations for officers in the local I. O. O. F. order occurred at the regular meeting Monday evening resulted in the naming of W. S. Casady for Noble Grand, George Myers for Vice Grand and W. R. Longhorn for Secretary.

IF YOU HAVE MANURE

You cannot afford to be without a Litchfield Manure Spreader

There are more LITCHFIELD SPREADERS on the project than the combined total of all other makes.

THERE IS A REASON.

Let us demonstrate what these will do to save labor and then ask the experiment station what manure means to even alfalfa fields, saying nothing of it's value in the garden, corn and potato patch.

EAGERLY WAITS FOR HOME TOWN WEEKLY

I read the daily paper—read the state and foreign news—of the doings here and yonder and of leading statesmen's views. Read of wrecks and fire and murder, baseball, politics and crime, marriages and births and dyings, all happenings of the time. Read the whole edition over from the first page to the last, news and comments, facts and fancies; things to come, things of the past. Then aside I thrust that paper, for it's no more good to me; half the things that I've read over soon my memory will flee. Then I get the home town weekly and with keen and eager eye read the news it has to tell me—news that's never dull or dry. For the news that's in that paper tells of folks I know and love, folks who are both friends and neighbors, folks whose goodness I can prove. Tells of school and church and college, lodge society and store, town improvements, council's doings, squibs and personals galore.

Having read this good town paper—read and swelled myself with pride—I crank up my ancient flyver and through town and country ride. Far away sometimes it takes me into other towns and states, where I may take notes and figures and make civic estimates. Then returning to my roof tree, call my neighbors to my side, and declare "So help me, Hannar, here I ever will abide."

And with each returning week day eagerly I watch and wait for the postman who is bringing the old weekly to my gate.

Oh, I must have the great dailies, magazines and trade reviews, but the thing that makes me happy is the home town weekly news.—J. H. Larimore.
