PLANT ORCHARDS IN AUTUMN

Fruit Growing Should Be Looked Upon as Long-Time Business Enterprise and Exacting.

The unusually profitable returns that commercial growers realized from their orchards last year, coupled with the even greater returns that appear to be certain this year, undoubtedly will lead many to consider seriously the advisability of setting an orchard. The writer of this article wishes neither to encourage nor discourage such plantings. There is occasion, however, for calling attention to several facts that have been established by experience. The first of these is that fruit growing should be looked upon as a long-time business enterprise. In addition to the original investment at the time of starting the orchard there is a six to eight year period during which the grower not only has to wait for returns but when he must add constantly to his original investment through care devoted to his trees. The fruit grower is fortunate indeed whose orchard at bearing age does not represent an outlay of at least twice as great as that represented by cost of land, nursery stock and planting right after it has been planted. In the second place orcharding is an exacting business. Not only year after year, but month after month, the trees need attention in the way of cultivation, spraying, borer and rabbit protection, etc. This care must be given them continuously from the time of setting as long as the orchard lasts. If profitable returns are to be expected. Any prospective grower who is unwilling to provide this constant care is to be advised to stay out of the orchard business, for otherwise he is certain to have little but disappointment as a reward for his half-way efforts. Ill-advised planting is expensive for the individual and an injury to the industry.

Those who are to plant orchards would do well to make all arrangements to plant in the fall rather than in the spring. This means that the land should be thoroughly prepared and the nursery stock ordered so that planting can start in late October. Fall-set trees do much better under Missouri conditions than trees planted in the spring. There is a smaller amount of loss of trees and the growth of the first two seasons is larger and more vigorous. Furthermore it is generally easier to obtain good grade nursery stock of the desired varieties than in the spring when supplies are more or less depleted.

The University of Missouri College of Agriculture will be glad to make suggestions regarding varieties, the choice of soils and locations, and many other details connected with the business, whenever this information is requested by the prospective grower.

MEN WHO KNOW SAY—

- That a groove can become a grave.
- That if you want knowledge you must toil for it.
- That economy is the art of making the most of life.
- That no man can be happy in this world without tolerance.

That no one, however great his genius or high his position, is all-important to the world; its work will go on without him. This truth may be painful to personal vanity, but it is comforting to every generous soul that cares more for others than for self.

That there is not in human nature a more odious disposition than a proneness to contempt, which is a mixture of pride and ill-nature. Nor is there any which more certainly denotes a bad mind, for in a good and benign temper there can be no room for this sensation.
