DAIRY FACTS

CAREFUL HANDLING OF MILK
All Vessels Should Be Freshly Scalded to Remove Bacteria—Cover Will Exclude Odors.

No matter how well milk has been handled up to the time it is delivered to the consumer, it cannot be expected to keep well if it is carelessly treated thereafter. It should be poured into pitcher, pan, or other vessel—freshly scalded to remove any bacteria or mold spores—and kept in a cool, clean place free from dirt, flies, etc. New milk should never be mixed with old unless it is used at once, as the bacteria in the old milk will, of course, be added also, and the mixed milk will not keep as well as the fresh milk alone.
Bacteria are thickest where there is dirt and decay, and milk should therefore be stored only in clean, sweet places. It is safer to keep it covered, to exclude not only dirt and bacteria but also the flavors and odors which it so easily absorbs. If kept at a temperature of 50 degrees Fahrenheit or less, good milk should remain sweet for 12 hours at least, after it reaches the consumer, and ordinarily for 24 hours or more, dairy specialists of the United States department of agriculture say. Sometimes in very hot weather housekeepers complain that in spite Does Your Engine Consume Too Much Gas?

Something Wrong. We Can Locate It.

If you are not getting full mileage out of your car you are losing money, and your engine needs attention. Possibly the entire car needs it. Where ever there is a "drag" there is a shrinkage in mileage—and no car owner wants to admit that his "bus" is not up to the standard.

We make a specialty of INCREASING MILEAGE in cars. Let us do it for you.

of all precautions it sours quickly, even in the ice box. This is often due to the fact that the air of the ice box, although it seems cold in contrast with the heat outside, is really not cold enough to check the growth of the bacteria; if a thermometer placed inside registers more than 50 degrees Fahrenheit, the fault is almost surely in the temperature of the ice box, and not in the milk.

In large cities, where most of the milk comes by morning trains from a considerable distance, it is often impossible to deliver fresh morning's milk in time for breakfast, and that milked the morning before must be given to patrons who insist on an early delivery. They would get their milk from 12 to 18 hours fresher if they would take it in the afternoon instead.

Freak Newspapers.
In Germany there is a newspaper that has nothing in it but stories about rheumatism. People having this trouble write in their experiences, doctors tell new ways to get rid of it and it seems that everybody there having rheumatism subscribes to this queer newspaper. Some years ago a Russian editor started a postcard-size newspaper, the print of which was so small that he furnished a magnifying glass to each of his regular subscribers. Somehow the idea didn't take, as he only printed a few numbers before finding out that the people didn't appreciate the idea, even though the magnifying glass was furnished free.
