Fruit Growers' Handbook Popular
Demand for the Fruit Growers' Handbook has been so strong that it will soon have to be reprinted, reports A. L. Lovett, entomologist of the O. A. C. Experiment station. The book was originally planned as a guide for Oregon growers, but outside specialists have found that it is a handy and reliable reference text. Requests for sample copies have come from Washington State horticulturist and E. D. Hunter, former student of horticulture at O. A. C., and now horticulturist for Skagit county, Washington, and the pomologist at Iowa State college. So useful has the volume proved to Oregon orchardists that the department intends to put out like hand books on stone fruit, insects, small fruit, if at a later date the present volume is found to fill the bill.

IRRIGATE THE SAHARA DESERT

American Windmills Are Now at Work Pumping Water for Artificial Algerian Oases.

It is refreshing in an almost literal sense, this report that a traveler brings back from the Algerian Sahara about the sinking of wells and the consequent irrigation and the improvement of highways.

It is delightful to imagine a fringe of green in that country, arid since the beginning of time, the blossoming of orchards and gardens, the waving of fields of grain, and the motorcar relieving the patient camel of its burden and making across the wastes in one-tenth the time the camel would take to do it. Between Tunis and Carthage this observer counted hundreds of American windmills, and the nomad Moor is ceasing to be so much of a nomad, but is rejoicing in an urgent bid for American motorcars.

How far it is possible for windmills and motorcars to work south from the border states of northern Africa and invade that hitherto hopeless sandy waste perhaps nobody knows, but it is encouraging that the invasion is proceeding just as it is constantly narrowing the limits of the arid regions on our own continent. Good, hard highways are linking the artificial oases together and the motorcar furnishes a quick way of communication between them as well as a means infinitely superior to the old camel caravan of getting fruits and grains to market.—Omaha World-Herald.

DYES TO BE SUPERFLUOUS?

Short Cut to Gorgeous Colorings Being Worked Out by a Wizard, It is Said.

A. W. Brabham of Olat, S. C., soon to be known as the Wizard of the Cotton Patch, Burbank's only rival, announces that the American dye industry is unnecessary, or at least soon will be, according to Drug and Chemical Markets. For has he not grown cotton already dyed various shades of brown, green, blue, pink and gray as it comes on the plant? And does he not expect to produce black in a few years as well as all the colors of the rainbow? Thus will the need of colors for cotton be obviated and the wealth that now is being accumulated by the dye barons will be diverted in the cotton growing districts of the South.

No mention is made of dyes for wool, but even these will be unnecessary when some genius undertakes to spend half a lifetime crossbreeding sheep to color their fleece, and this genius would have less difficulty than with cotton, as he would have ready at hand the world over supply of "black sheep." Then it would only be necessary to teach the silk worms to turn out colored silk after feeding on the flower bed and the flax plant to produce green fibers from green sand, blue from blue marl, red from red clay, and black from loam, and infallibly.

On Selecting Doors.

Haphazard selection of doors of the ready-made variety should not be allowed in the building of a fine home, declares an announcement issued at Chicago by the lumber interests. Doors should be designed by the architect who builds the structure, that they may be in keeping with the general style of the house, it is stated.

It is pointed out that in the selection of an attractive and distinctive doorway depends the visitor's first impression of the home he is about to enter.

Recounting the history of doors, lumber manufacturers point out that in early days wooden doors were hung on sockets instead of hinges. In the middle ages doors were richly carved and in the gothic period were nearly covered with intricate ornamentation extending as part of the hinges.

Why They Laughed.

A little girl in one of the lower-grade rooms of the Columbus public schools brought forth peals of laughter from the roomful of pupils, and when she sat down, blushing with surprise and embarrassment, she did not know what had caused the unprecedented hilarity. She had been reading and when she came to the word "lord," used as a title, she did not comprehend it properly. The sentence was, "My lord, permit me to pass." The little girl, evidently having heard the term used in another way, said with great emphasis and at the top of her voice: "My lord! Permit me to pass!"—Indianapolis News.

Plants Affected by Gas.

The effect on the growth of plants caused by increasing the amount of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere has been tried, and the results are said to have been very promising. The gas, obtained in the process of smelting iron ore was supplied by pipes to an area of some seven acres, and the crops taken off this land were from 82 per cent upward greater than those from similar, but untreated plots.

We Got the Job.

"I want a boy to run errands." "I kin do that," said the freckle-faced applicant. "I said run." "I don't want you to stroll." "Yes, sir, I won't stroll, except when I start to leave for the night. That will give you a chance to call me back if you think of anything else you want gone."—Birmingham Age-Herald.
