"DEPARTED SPIRITS" ARE SHOWN IN "THE SIX BEST CELLERS"

No precious jewel was ever guarded more closely than were five innocent-looking boxes at the Lasky studio during the filming of the "Six Best Cellars," the new picture starring Bryant Washburn at the Playhouse Theatre Tuesday, March 29th. "Extras" and members of the cast could be found eyeing them wistfully during intervals in the action. Johannesberger Bewern Auslese, 1878, stencilled on the boxes, was the explanation. They contained full bottles of one of the rarest vintages of wine in existence.

"The Six Best Cellars" is an amusing story about Prohibition in which the "Johnny Berger" plays a prominent part. Director Donald Crisp wanted some samples of the real thing for the picture. But in these days it was like searching for the proverbial needle to locate it. Finally a former brewery magnate, now a millionaire living in retirement in Los Angeles, was induced to loan the cases from his private stock.

In the picture Bryant Washburn has the role of the leading light in an exclusive social set of young married people in a suburban town. His prominence depends largely upon the stock of choice drinkables in his cellar. When this runs low, he makes frantic efforts to recoup, with humorous results. Wanda Hawley is the leading woman, and it is a Paramount Artaft picture directed by Donald Crisp.

The High School Mirror

Vol. 1

Devoted to the Interest and Development of the Hermiston Schools

No. 12

Last Friday the second team of the Hermiston High and Stanfield High played a practice game of baseball on the home grounds. Stanfield won with a score of 10 to 17.

The Seniors are proudly displaying their new class pins received this week. The pins are shield shaped, made of old gold with H. H. S. '21 in bright gold letters.

The program for the High School entertainment to be given April 8th at the Playhouse has been arranged and the students are working on their assigned parts.

The feature of the evening will be a roaring farce entitled "Hans Von Smash" by seven students of the High School. This will be an entertainment worth seeing. Remember the date. Come and enjoy a good laugh.

The time has come again for changing the editor of the Mirror. At a meeting of the Senior class Thursday, Viola Bennett was elected editor-in-chief and Nida Patrick assistant. Ruby Scott was appointed news reporter and Albert Hedwall athletic reporter.

Howard Parrish was pleasantly surprised last Friday by a number of his friends the occasion being his birthday. A delightful evening was spent in playing games, after which the guests departed wishing that Howard's birthday came more often.

The triangular contest for the sale of library benefit tickets was won by Lucille Sullivan. The prize awarded was a five pound box of chocolates which was generously passed around to the whole high school.

The school board has arranged to have a mile track put in around the ball diamond. Work will be begun soon.

In one of his lectures E. J. Klemme of Bellingham Normal quotes the following poem:

"Say, fellows, let me tell you
I'd be happy as a clam
If I was the fellow my mother thinks
I am.
She thinks I am a wonder
And knows her little lad,
Would never mix with nothing
That's ugly, mean and bad;
And lots of times I sit and think
How nice 'twould be, gee whiz,
If a fellow was the fellow
That his mother thinks he is."

The purpose of the mirror is to reflect. In the "High School Mirror" is reflected our opinions. We wish you to observe, however, that a mirror reverses the image. Therefore, gentle reader our ideas as reflected in the mirror are often the opposite of the real image; thus persons concerned should not be offended.

The Mirror Editor.

THE NEW MARKETING LAW

M. S. SHROCK

Oregon Dairymen's Cooperative League

Every producer of any farm crop in the state of Oregon will be benefited by the action of the recent legislature in passing the one real constructive piece of legislation, the cooperative marketing law. The effect of this act will be far-reaching. It gives the small farmer a new ray of hope.

In the past the producer has been harrassed by the speculator and gambler in food products who created an unstable market. The farmers' returns were always a matter of doubt. Individual marketing provides for no uniform system of standardizing or grading. Products thus handled usually bring a price based on the lowest grade included in the lot.

To the consumer ungraded products are unsatisfactory, because they are not dependable. The average consumer willingly pays a fair price for an article known to be of good quality and uniform.

Producers have often resulted from the lack of cohesiveness in the organization while it was getting a start. Middlemen and speculators have helped to disrupt them by spreading seeds of discontent and by baiting members away from the organization.

The recent enactment of the legislature provides for iron-bound contracts between the members and the association. It provides that heavy penalties may be prescribed in such contract for the breach thereof. With the danger of disruption removed the producers' marketing associations will be able to pull through the trying times that come to all organizations before they have had time to show effective results by established brands of products.

Once well established such organizations will be able to reach out to the consumer and eliminate or reduce by a big margin the difference that now often amounts to 50 to 100 per cent of the price producer gets.

We now have several state wide organizations that have been trying to establish themselves, such as the Oregon Growers' Cooperative Association, with its "Midland" prunes and other horticultural crops, the Pacific Cooperative Poultry Producers with its "Nulade" eggs, the Oregon Dairymen's Cooperative League with its "Melowest" butter and cheese. Two other organizations are in the formative process, the Cooperative Wool and Mohair Producers and the Oregon Wheat Growers' Association. Some ten years ago Dr. Hector MacPherson, of the Bureau of Markets, at Corvallis, was sent by the Federal Government to Europe to study country life conditions. Being a marketing expert, he naturally recognized the importance of cooperative marketing in the daily welfare of the European workers.

Upon his return he drafted a bill which was enacted into law in 1913. This law was considered the most modern piece of legislation of its kind in force at that time. Since then much progress has been made along the lines of cooperative marketing. More thought has been given the subject and newer ideas formed.

Last fall Dr. MacPherson went to California and studied conditions where success had been attained along this line than in any other part of the United States. Upon his return he drew up certain amendments that he felt were vital to the fullest development of a system of marketing that brings producer and consumer closer to each other than the present system.

All other advocates of the "back to the farm" movement have accomplished nothing. People will go back to the farm only when the profits that can be made there are sufficient to enable them to live under 1921 conditions instead of 1850 conditions, under which most rural populations now exist.

Denmark, where cooperative marketing has been encouraged and practiced for forty years, is the only nation on the face of the globe where in the last decade rural population has increased at the expense of the cities. In all other countries the people have migrated from the farm to the city, so that the food supply is actually threatened. Prosperity on the farm means prosperity to all. The new cooperative marketing law safeguards the small producers and shortens the road from the producer to the consumer.

A bitter fight was staged against this bill by the Nestles Food Co., the big 43,000,000 foreign cooperation, which has at all times been determined to disrupt marketing organizations and insist upon dealing only with individuals. Their opposition availed them nothing, and in fact, served only to cement the members of the legislature together in favor of the bill. The bill passed the Senate with only four dissenting votes. The four voting against it being Hume and Mosier of Multnomah county; Edwards of Tillamook county and Nickelson of Hood River. It passed the House with four voting against it, namely, Allen of Lane county; Beals of Tillamook County; Burdick of Deschutes and Hyatt of Wallowa county. Their argument against the bill was that, if given too much encouragement and protection farmers' organizations would grow into one great big monopoly, detrimental to society.

There is a world of difference between a trust composed of producers who combine for the purpose of marketing their own crops and a trust composed of a few speculators who combine for the purpose of cornering a commodity for speculative purpose.

A producers' monopoly will never become a trust detrimental to society. It is their business to continue producing. If producers attempt to bolster up prices to the point where consumption is curtailed, they injure themselves by destroying their future market. A trust composed of men who buy and sell is not interested in future production, seeking only to profit by that which is under its control, it squeezes the public for the last dollar regardless of the future welfare of either producer or consumer.
