Power to Come From Columbia

DEVELOPMENT OF UMATILLA RAPIDS NECESSARY

Relief From High Railroad Charges May Come From Using Latent Electric Power

Advocates of the Umatilla rapids project will be interested in the following clipping from a New York story dealing with the value of railroad electrification:

"Electrification of the railroads is today one of the big questions bearing upon industrial progress. If electrification is feasible, as every one of the installations made to date indicates, it offers a means of realizing the economies necessary to overcome the oppressive and burdensome transportation situation which hinders industrial readjustment and trade expansion through excessive cost of service and inadequacy.

"The use of electric locomotives will conserve the fuel supply, increase the practical speed of both freight and passenger trains, permit the handling of longer trains with correspondingly greater capacity and obviously, bring about certain car-mile economies and in general expedite the operation of trains. These advantages are quite generally and the use of electric locomotives has been gaining steadily in the favor of American railroad men and in the favor of public as well."

The argument for electrification applies with particular force in the west and especially the northwest. We have the latent power in this region and while we let it go to waste the railroads haul in expensive coal from distant states.

The problem is how to get our power developed. It is evident that if we wait for the railroads to develop power through private capital and chiefly or solely for railroad use we will wait a long time. The roads do not have the money. Besides power is needed for other purposes aside from transportation and it is scarcely fair to expect the railroads to carry the load alone. The Umatilla rapids project would be as valuable for irrigation as for railroad electrification. It would improve navigation on the Columbia. We cannot expect private capital to indulge in river improvement. That is a governmental duty. Neither is it the habit for private capital to carry out big irrigation projects such as is contemplated in connection with the rapids project. The United States government has taken over reclamation work of this character.

Then what could be more logical than for the government to act, either alone or through help of the states interested, towards developing power on the Columbia? If it is to take such action where is there a project so admirable as the Umatilla rapids project with which to start?

The Umatilla rapids power site is having an engineering-report prepared with a view to showing what can be done through development of power at this site. The data is not yet ready but facts so far ascertained are very pleasing and give promise that when the findings are all compiled we will have a splendid case to work with. It is an ambitious thing to say but there is sound reason for the belief that if the country will harken soon to the Umatilla rapids project association it will find the key not only to one of the big transportation problems but also to the door that now hides the northwest's greatest unused natural asset.

Mrs. J. W. Hammon and Mrs. L. P. Weith from the other side of Westland were in town Monday.

Is There Oil in the Ground Near Hermiston?

The only way we will ever find out is to drill and see.

J. E. Leonard of Pendleton has leased more than 21,000 acres of land in the west end of Umatilla county and geologists say that prospects for oil are good.

Mr. Leonard is now selling shares in his leases. It is hoped to raise $30,000. All money so raised will be spent to pay for expenses of developing and drilling and for nothing else. Shares are $100 each. You can pay $25 down and $25 a month if you prefer.

Nobody knows for certain whether there is oil here. The only way anybody ever will know is to drill down and see. That is what we are going to do. If there is oil here it will make all who buy these shares rich. It will develop this country beyond anything you can imagine.

Isn't it worth a small risk when the prospects are so bright if we win? Isn't it worth a small risk? Aren't we willing to bet something on the future of the country? Every man should help it out.

THINK IT OVER AND THEN LET US HEAR FROM YOU
