IDEA FOR THEME OF "HAIRPINS," CAUGHT AT PARTY
 Hairpin Drops From Waitress' Hair and Sullivan Gets Busy at Once

A dinner party at a fashionable hotel gave C. Gardner Sullivan the idea for the theme and plot of "Hairpins," the latest Ince-Paramount-Art-craft photoplay starring Enid Bennett, which will be shown at the Play House next Wednesday.
 The dinner at which Mr. Sullivan was a guest, was being served by waitresses. During the progress of the meal a hairpin drooped from the head of one of the young women onto the table. She carelessly picked it up, muttered an apology and replaced it in her hair.
 But Mr. Sullivan had his idea. He began to wonder what sort of wife his woman would make to some man. He wondered if he, as the husband of a woman so careless and untidy, would be contented. For several days he pondered. And then he set to work on his story, and "Hairpins" one of the most appealing stories Mr. Sullivan has ever written, was the result.
 "Hairpins" is a story of an old-fashioned wife, who, through her failure to keep up her personal appearance, failed to hold the interest of her husband. When she realizes her mistake she sets about to live differently. Fred Nibo directed "Hairpins" under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince, George James was cameraman.
