"THE VALLEY OF DOUBT" IS WEEK END FEATURE Story Deals With Great North West; Will be at Umatilla Friday, Hermiston Saturday

Judging from a brief synopsis of the Willard Mack story, "The Valley of Doubt," a new Selznick picture produced under the personal supervision of Burton George, which opens a 2 day engagement showing at Umatilla Friday and Hermiston Saturday, this picture tells one of the strongest and most closely knitted screen stories of the present picture season.

When Marion Hilgrade, daughter of a great lumber king of the North, west, undertook to guard the interests of a wayward brother, she little dreamed that Cupid awaited her in the guise of a rugged lumberman.

Fate won for her the acquaintance of Jules Bonnavet, a French-Canadian, when she turned her ankle in the snow. The mutual attraction was instantaneous and thereafter Marion was the fair subject of Jules' attention and affections.

But every drama has its villain and in this instance Jack Macy, lumber camp manager for Marion's father, proved his right to the title, Macy attempted to discredit Jules in Marion's eyes by telling her that he, Jules, was responsible for her brother's waywardness.

Has Big Theme Into the story came also Annie, a young French girl, who had been mistreated by Macy. Macy placed the blame on Jules and incited the lumbermen to an uprising against him for his alleged crime. Marion, believing Jules guilty, turned from him. Then, during the last great climax in which Jules faced Macy, man to man, Annie told the truth, branding Macy and vindicating Jules. Also Charlie Chaplin in "The Vagabond."

"NO WOMAN KNOWS" TO BE HERE IN ABOUT TWO WEEKS Mabel Julienne Scott, who has the interesting role of "Fanny Herself" in "No Woman Knows" which is coming to the Play House in about two weeks is noted for her excellent work in various unusual female characterizations. She has had considerable success in Indian type roles. She lived for a number of months on an Indian reservation in Colorado. As "Fanny," a small-town girl, she has the supreme portrayal of her career in "No Woman Knows," the Universal-Jewel production directed by Tod Browning.
