The Story of Our States

By JONATHAN DRAKE
XIV.—VERMONT

THE derivation of the name Vermont comes from the French "verts moutains," or green mountains, and it was likewise the French who were probably the first white men to see those lofty landmarks which so appropriately give this state its name.

This was in July, 1606, when Champlain made his memorable voyage up the lake now called after him. The first permanent settlement was made in 1724 at Bratford, where the Massachusetts colony established a fort as a buffer against invasion from the north. The territory used was part of what was known as the "Equivalent Lands," which were sold at public auction in Hartford for about a farthing an acre, the proceeds being donated to Yale college. Shortly after this, settlers pushed eastward from New York across Lake Champlain and westward from New Hampshire. This led to disputes between these two colonies as to their boundaries. Under the leadership of Ethan Allen New York's claims were resisted by a local military force, which proudly called themselves "the Green Mountain Boys." It was these same men who played such a brilliant part during the Revolution.

In 1777 a formal Constitution for the state was adopted and Vermonters are proud of the fact that theirs was the first of the states to prohibit slavery by constitutional provision. For a number of years Vermont remained as a separate republic. But in 1791 it was admitted to the Union as the first addition to the original thirteen states.

In size Vermont has 9,564 square miles, and its congressional delegation numbers four. It thus casts four votes for the president.

FOCH LEADS BLIND SOLDIER

French Marshal Rebukes Attendant Who Says He Hasn't Time to Assist the Sightless One.

Paris.—"Excuse me; am I near the Wounded Soldiers' institute?" asked a blind veteran of a passing pedestrian as he tapped his way along the sidewalk. "I've been there only twice and I'm not quite sure of the way."

"You are close to it now; let me take you," came the reply.

Arriving at the door the guide said to the janitor: "Kindly take this man to the section for the blind."

"Take him yourself," growled the janitor. "Under the archway on the other side of the courtyard."

The civilian did so, but on the way out addressed the janitor again. "Couldn't you be a little more obliging to the blind?" he asked gently.

"There are too many and I haven't the time," was the response.

"It seems to me it is your duty to help them," said the other. "I can find time."

The man was Marshal Foch.

THE RED SCOURGE

"On the tenth day of July a man set fire to more than a score of houses. Every home was entirely consumed and there was no insurance. The man went on his way, if not rejoicing, at least without visible evidence of regret. He had no fear of punishment because the homes he had destroyed were not yet built; they were still in the tree trunks awaiting the magic wand of industry to give them habitable form. But economically these homes were destroyed as surely as though the trees had been made into lumber and the lumber into structures. And this is the way it happened:

"It was the vacation season and an automobile carrying a party of tourists stopped on a road that wound through a magnificent stand of Douglas fir, in Western Washington. The travelers sat in rapturous admiration of the quiet forest scene and rhapsodized over the great trees that columned their majestic beauty as far as the eye could see. One of the men of the party lit a contemplative cigarette and tossed the match to the side of the road.

"Half an hour later an aeroplane forest patrol flying high above the mountain range saw yellowish smoke ballooning over the tree tops. He moved his control and turned in that direction. Upon the chart in the machine before him he located the fire approximately, then returned quickly to a mountain fire station ten miles away.

"After what seemed an interminable wait, the patrol noted various gangs of men at work. They were combating that most terrifying, most ungovernable and dangerous of all rebellious elements—the forest fire. For a day and a night and another day the battle waged. Grimy men, black as the charred trunks around them, worn to the last stages of exhaustion, fought on—cutting away underbrush, dynamiting logs and trees, beating out the slinking fringes of advancing ground fire, shouting one to another above the crackling inferno of heat and smoke, panting like hunted animals around the water barrels where they slaked their thirst with the luke-warm liquid, but gaining, almost imperceptible at first, yet gradually with greater certainty as the weary hours dragged on. And amid the confusion and the crash of falling timber the ranger and his foreman generalised the battle.

"Several days later a large barren scar lay upon the mountainside, still smouldering in places where the black splinters of the charred stumps pointed like accusing fingers, and still sent out masses of yellowish white smoke. The scar covered hundreds of acres and it would continue to smoulder and smoke for weeks, while all about in the adjacent woods were fire guards constantly vigilant to see that the enemy did not creep out and strike again. "And far away the automobile tourists journeyed carefree and utterly unconcerned. At a sawmill they stopped for a few minutes to watch the jogs in slow procession from the pond to the band saws. 'What a shame,' exclaimed the man with the cigarette, in a burst of sentimental revolt, 'What a shame to cut down these beautiful trees!'"
