THE PART OF THE SHOW NOT ON THE PROGRAM

There is a certain class of people which attend movie shows who persist in reading aloud the titles and commenting upon the plot as it is disclosed.

They seem to believe that the story on the screen is too deep for the audience and for the benefit of the crowd of movie fans who have gathered to witness the performance, explain each scene. There are a few in Hermiston who believe it their duty to do this.

A few nights ago a certain couple was among those in attendance at the Playhouse. The following conversation was carried on between them during the entertainment.

"There is the guy that she is going to marry."

"Naw, tain't neither. She'll marry that hatchet face fellow standing over there by the window."

"Aw, he's a crook. Didn't you see him swipe that society dame's necklace when she wasn't looking?"

"See that fellow getting into the car. He's the villain. Looks like a fellow I used to know." "He must have been a delegate to a bootleggers convention. He is lit up like a light house."

"I'll bet there will be a fight before this reel is over. Didn't I tell you. Look at them bat each other around." "Now isn't that just like a woman butting in where she don't belong." "She will get her block knocked off if she don't get away and let them fight."

All during the performance the audience was compelled to listen to this sort of chatter. People who persist in doing this display a lack of breeding. They are nothing more or less than a common nuisance to other people who attend the movies.

It takes all kinds of people to make up a world and no doubt we will have to put up with this class until Gabriel toots his horn as a signal for the final reckoning.

A DAY WITH THE EDITOR

A good many people believe that an editor goes through life "on flowery beds of ease." They associate him with work and worry in the same manner that one would think of a seed catalog and the Sahara desert.

Just trail along with him for a day gentle reader and you will see that his bed is composed mostly of thorns instead of roses.

At the breakfast table his wife "pans" him in this manner: "I see in your last issue," she exclaims, "you have an editorial concerning women wearing their dresses longer. I don't see how I can wear mine any longer than I have been. Why I haven't had a new dress for the last two years."

He gulps his breakfast down hurriedly and starts for the office. On the way down he meets Mrs. Smith. He greets her with a cherry good morning. "What do you mean," she inquires, "by running that birth notice I sent in among the want ads." He tries to explain that the item had come in late and through a mistake in the makeup it got in the want ad column. But she refuses to listen to the explanation and is not a bit bashful in telling him that she is through with the editor and his paper.

When he reaches the office he finds a reception committee awaits him. A lady accosts him. "A few days ago my daughter was married. In writing up the wedding you stated that she wore a French Marmalade embroidered with Spanish asparagus. The notice sent you was written plainly and if you were not a dumbbell you would have read Hungarian hug-me-nots instead of Spanish asparagus." This is her parting shot. "We have been taking this notice for five years and intended to pay for it this spring, but now you can stop it for we don't want it any more." After she slams the door a big husky guy blows in. "You certainly raised Cain over to my house," he begins, "You remember that local you ran last week about my mother-in-law visiting me. You got it mother-in-law; now she is sore at me. Thinks I told you to print it that way." The editor procures a copy of the paper and sure enough he failed to catch the mistake. He has to make his talk snappy and effective to keep from receiving a thrashing. All day long he is panned in this manner and he begins to think that Job was a lucky guy compared with him.

Towards closing time a fellow drops in. "Mr. editor," he begins, "I have been taking your paper for two years." "Yes, I know you have," answers the editor, "and you are going to inform me that it is a rotten sheet. Along with this you are going to tell me that as an editor I am a dancing master. Before you start in

I don't want you to think it peculiar if I do not raise my eyebrows in surprise when you make these statements. I have been told the same thing a dozen times today."

"No," replied the visitor, "I was going to tell you that I had come in to pay you the four dollars that I owe for the paper."

When the editor comes to the visitor had disappeared.

That evening when he closed shop the world didn't seem such a bad place to live in after all. Even though his other callers had offered nothing but kicks the man with the four dollars subscription had been instrumental in making it the "End of a Perfect Day" for ye scribe.

That night as he plodded his weary way home there was a song in the editor's heart and puckering up his lips he whistled lustily, "Ain't We Got Fun."

Moral: Pay your subscription and forget to knock.

The sugar barons will get you if you don't watch out.

Since sugar has soared rhubarb sauce and gooseberry pie are classed as luxuries.

We use to think that in this land of democracy every man had a chance to be president. But now we realize our mistake for everyone does not know how to play golf.

A cornet and a man who persists in practicing upon it is responsible for more "To Rent" signs than anything else in the neighborhood.

In small communities the family clothes-line is the social register.

Patrick Henry announced to the world that he was a married man when he exclaimed, "give me liberty or give me death."
