Nothing Like Marriage to Stir Up Interest
There is always "human interest" in the account of a wedding in which the contracting parties belong to decidedly different social strata. It is interesting when a chauffeur elopes with the daughter of a citizen who pays a federal income tax of more than $1,000. But if a dishwasher becomes the husband of a lady whose family is given an AA rating, both in the register of society and in the register of finance, the event is a nine days' wonder, observes the Boston Globe.

Getting married represents one of the chief businesses of the human race. It is supposed that women are more concerned with it than men, but that may be disputed. Some men have been known to acquire fortunes and other men to obtain positions by reason of the women they have espoused. Whenever the wedding bells ring most people stop to appraise the alliance.

It is a curious fact that very few marriages are entirely satisfactory to the relatives of both parties. The whisper goes around that "she might have done better," or that "he could have found a wife who would have been of more help in his career."

In this endless discussion of marriages there is ground for the suspicion that the democratic United States is a trifle aristocratic after all. When the question of a wife or a husband comes up it is treated as though there were as many gradations of caste in American life as among the population of India. And yet the federal Constitution forbids titles of nobility.

Torpedo
It is curious that a projectile which is famous for its swift action once it is started on its way should have been derived from the word "torpid." But "torpid" is the origin of our word "torpedo."
The word "torpid" has two meanings. One is what the word generally designates—lack of motion or feeling. The other is, by association, a kind of racing boat used at Oxford university. The torpedo is in one sense a racing boat, but it is in no sense torpid once it is set in motion to do its deadly work.
Only before it has been fired is the torpedo a torpid or inactive object. After that simple process has been performed it is, generally speaking, as effective as lightning when it strikes.—Chicago Journal.

Dangerous Duty, Breaking Bad News to Old Kings
One of the most unpleasant duties in royal courts of the Middle Ages—and later—was the breaking of bad news to the sovereign; not only unpleasant, in fact, but actually dangerous. Monarchs had not then arrived at the state of enlightenment which they are alleged to have reached nowadays. They really believed themselves to be as described in their titles—God-appointed, Ever-Victorious, and so on. And, often being in point of character either unmitigated physical brutes or feeble-minded results of inbreeding, they experienced the reactions of ill-bred children when their vanities or their purses were touched. On receipt of bad news, they felt like smashing something; and the most obvious something was the messenger. To dash out the kneeling man's brains with a mace or slash his head off with a sword was a most convenient and logical method of revenging one's royal self on the nasty old world.

The fear of death is the real mother of invention. The courtiers' messages are sometimes masterpieces of hunting. Witness the method of informing a French king that his supposedly invincible navy had been vanquished by the English under most humiliating circumstances.
The court jester took a cup of wine and asked the king to drink to the confusion of the cowardly English. "Cowardly?" asked the king. "Yes," said the jester. "They have so proved themselves in a sea battle. For when your brave Normans jumped out of their ships into the sea, the English dared not follow them."—By F. R. Buckley in Adventure Magazine.

Birth of Words
Where do new words come from? Some, of course, are coined by scientists and philosophers, others are lifted bodily from one language to another, as, for instance, the French "sabotage," now excellent English.
Sometimes, too, a word is coined by a newspaper. For instance, the word "apache" which has now been officially admitted to the French language by a decision of the academy was invented by the Figaro newspaper 22 years ago, when it used it to describe a Parisian criminal type which has since become famous.
Another word which caught on "snuffragette," also owes its existence to the genius of a newspaper man. This word appeared for the first time in the columns of the Daily Mail—Answers.

Lady Arabella Johnson
Lady Arabella was the daughter of Thomas, earl of Lincoln. She married Isaac Johnson, who left his native land for New England from religious motives. Lady Arabella cheerfully accompanied him, and they arrived in Salem, Mass., in April, 1630. Her exalted character and gentleness gained her universal esteem, but she died in the September following her arrival. Mr. Johnson survived her little more than a month. He is regarded as the founder of Boston, and though his time was brief, yet the good work he accomplished will never be forgotten by the people of New England. But dearer still is the memory of Lady Arabella.—Chicago Journal.
