Declare Birds Are Insensible to Color
Bavarian scientists claim to have made certain the fact that birds cannot see color, are not affected by it; in fact, any color is good with the birds, even those of bright and gay plumage having no appreciation of the fact that they are better dressed than others.

Even the gorgeous display of the male peacock brings no sensation of beautiful colors to the eyes of other birds about.

The test with birds' eyes show, the scientists assert, that birds do not look at things as human beings do, that all flying birds by day see everything in a bright, red orange light and are only sensitive in a slight way to the short waves of light that make blue and violet visible. Night-flying birds are less sensitive to colors than those that make their flight by day, the eyes of all birds being screened from intense light by tiny globules of oil in the retina of the eye that act as color screens. The Bavarian scientists say the Darwin idea, that beautiful plumage of birds is a factor in the selection of mates, is merely a fanciful theory, poetic and interesting but lacking scientific support.

PIONEER OF COUNTY DIES AT PENDLETON

Mrs. R. E. Thom died Wednesday at St. Anthony's hospital, Pendleton, where she had been taken the day previous for an operation. She was in a weakened condition and passed away before the operation could be performed.

She leaves four sons, Dick, Robert, John and Fred, and two daughters, Mrs. McNurlin and Georgia, both of Pendleton.

Arrangements for the funeral have not yet been made.
