

POULTRY HOUSE IDEAS

The poor lumber dealer got a awful wallop not long ago. And this is the way it happened. Chicken houses were being built at least twelve high with a wonderful arrangement of sash and ventilators way up there so high that they might have served as "lookouts" in the time of invasion.

Since chickens are not built on the same plan as giraffes, folks began to realize that all that superstructure was unnecessary. Now they build their poultry houses not more than eight feet high at the highest place. They have found that the chickens can keep warmer and with a simple ventilating arrangement they do much better.

But it doesn't take near as much lumber to build this new style house, and that is why we feel discouraged, but it will brighten us up a great deal if you will build for 300 hens instead of for the 200 that you had thought of.

You can do it for the same money

We'll sell the same amount of lumber and you will have increased your capacity fifty per cent without additional expense. You'll be happy and so will we.

Farmer Gets Benefit of Ancestor's Bravery

One pfennig rental has been paid annually for the past 250 years by the same tenant family to the house of Rantzau, at Itzehoe, Germany, for ten acres of land. A pfennig equals one-fourth of a cent. The recipient this year is the family of Count Ulrich K. Brockdorff-Rantzau. Because of the scarcity of silver pfennigs, with which the original agreement provided that the rental be paid, the same coin has been used in the transaction for 25 years. Each year the coin is received with great formality and handed back to the farmer so that he may "pay" again the following year. The curious agreement commenced when the original Count Rantzau, huping on horseback on the border of his large estate near Itzehoe, rode into a swamp. His horse sank immediately. The count shouted for help and Riehnhard Brauer, a neighboring farmer, succeeded at the peril of his life in rescuing the nobleman. Brauer spurned a cash reward, but Count Rantzau insisted on showing his gratitude in some manner. "Well," said Brauer, "if you must give me something, let me have the marsh from which I rescued you." The count agreed, on the condition that Brauer and his descendants pay to Count Rantzau and his descendants an annual rental of one silver pfennig.

NOTICE

I wish to assure the butterfat producers of this project that my only desire is to give you a square deal, and that I shall try to uphold the same principles that Mr. Berry has always held in his dealings with you. I shall retain Miss Nation as tester. You who have watched her from month to month know that she is an expert in this line.

C. WARNER,
Manager Mutual Creamery Co.,
