BETTER THAN WE KNOW

The other day in a Portland paper appeared a news story in which a German steel salesman was quoted as to conditions in Germany at present.

The man is a German, and it may safely be assumed that one of his chief functions in addition to selling steel products in America, is to get as much publicity as he can that will tend to react to the benefit of Germany.

We in Oregon have not had every thing we wanted, nor all we thought we were entitled to, during these past few years, but we could be a lot worse off than we are.

The season has now opened for taking trips to see if a better location may not be found.

Life is full of inexplicable disappointments. Think of the Echo pitcher the other day who struck out 17 Boardman players and still failed to win his game.

If it is human to err, there certainly are few angels on the Hermiston base ball team.

Deputy Sheriff Pankow has a dog that never forgets a man who has been in court. Almost a human attribute!

It's reassuring to know that in a year when many irrigation projects are braced to expect a shortage of water, that early in May with an appreciable part of the irrigation season behind us Cold Springs reservoir is practically full with the feed canal still carrying some water.

It takes politicians to tell us how to cut taxes, but where is the man who can tell us how to reduce the cost of eating.

It's one thing to receive from her in May a fountain pen as a birthday gift and quite another to keep her from monopolizing it after the wedding in June to write home to her folks.

Fifty years in which to pay! Now bring on something else to worry about.

Horrible Methods of Treating the Insane

Until within the last century insane persons were treated with terrible cruelty in nearly all "civilized" countries, and as late as 1770 lunatics were exhibited at public fairs in England and as late as 1815 there were exposures of terrible cruelties in the Bethlem hospital in England, and this led to gradual improvements and the introduction of enlightened and scientific methods in the care of the mentally afflicted.

One of the mildest of the old forms of treatment of mad people, and long in vogue at Strathfillan, in Perthshire, Scotland, was connected with the observance of the festival of St. Fillan, a Scottish saint.

Insane people were dipped in the "holy pool," where St. Fillan had bathed in the seventh century. Many quaint ceremonies were connected with this "ducking." After the immersion the lunatics were herded to St. Fillan's chapel, and strapped to the floor, to be left all night.

Those who managed to free their bonds and escape were considered cured. Experience did not bear out this pious belief, however, and the custom gradually declined.

Queer Contributions to Medical Science

The Warwickshire county councillor who bequeathed his body to the General hospital, Birmingham, in the hope that light would be thrown on the origin of headache, "the unmerciful scourge that has wrecked my happiness from my earliest recollection," followed a long line of posthumous benefactors to medical science.

Perhaps the most remarkable of all was Jeremy Bentham, the philosopher, who directed that his skeleton should be clothed, provided with a specially molded wax head, and presented to the medical section of University college, London, where it may still be seen.

Hospitals often receive queer bequests. Charing Cross hospital not long ago received a bag containing forty-eight farthings, a bust of Queen Victoria, and the return half of a railway ticket. Another famous hospital received the deeds of a freehold house, a pawnticket for a valuable sporting trophy, a diamond ring, several prize rabbit skins, and twenty aspidistras in pots.—London Times.

English Common Law

The written "common law" is given to the unwritten law—lex non scripta—of England. In contradistinction to the written or statute law, it consists of a collection of maxims of British, Danish and Saxon extraction, to which custom and judicial decisions have given the force of law; and derives its origin, it is said, from King Alfred's code of laws, promulgated in 890 A. D. and afterwards lost. Statute law prevails over common law. The common law of the United States is based on that of England.—Exchange.
