CONCENTRATES AND SPECIALTIES

Several reasons exist why the rest of Oregon and the northwest as a whole are justified in keeping an eye on the Umatilla project to see some steady, substantial growth.

There will be available for settlement his fall additional land comprising several thousand acres that will receive water stored in McKay reservoir. The delivery of water is to start in the spring of 1927.

New irrigable land with an adequate water right, an excellent climate with plenty of sunshine and a long growing season is an inducement, but the land in itself is not all of the inducement.

A program that is still in the making has been evolved by the farmers now operating on the old project that will be worth a lot of money to new settlers. The following of the program can readily mean the difference between achieving success or meeting failure.

The program calls for producing specialty crops suited to the soil and climate for which there is a broad market with a keen demand. It also includes the producing of concentrates. In both of these pursuits local farmers are proving their ability, and the capacity of the project to produce them.

Dairy cows are found on every hand, and some of the best blood in dairy breeds is to be found here. A movement is under way to start a cow testing association which will back pedigrees with production records. By the aid of the dairy cow project farmers are getting away from the idea of selling hay, a bulky, freight-eating crop, and substituting therefor butter and cream, high priced concentrates.

The asparagus acreage is growing more rapidly than was ever dreamed of, even a few short months since. Early potatoes, shipments of which have already started, have a prospect of returning gross yields of close to $200 per acre. The berry crops have left a neat margin for growers.

One of the biggest potential sources of wealth to the project, now well started, is the poultry business. The other day two successful poultry growers, from the Willamette valley candidly admitted that the Umatilla project has natural conditions that make it a more favorable place for growing chickens and producing eggs than the valley. Experts who know the whole northwest and the southwest have stated that there is not a district that has more favorable conditions of climate and soil than are offered by the project. Local people realize these facts and are executing plans calculated to make this district one of the really big, important egg centers of the west.

The development under way and the character of the farmers who are bringing about the changes coupled with the advantages of plenty of sunshine, ample water supplies, and a productive soil, promise vast changes.

The Umatilla project will bear watching.

FARM REMINDERS

While some Oregon dairymen feed small quantities of silage to young calves with success, says the Oregon experiment station, it is generally considered better to encourage the eating of more dry roughage by withholding the silage. This develops capacity and serves as further insurance against scours.

Canning Oregon strawberries is easily done if the fruit is packed in jars after steaming and washing, says the horticultural products department at the college. The fruit is covered with a hot syrup made of six pounds of sugar and four pounds of water. The lids and rubbers are placed on the jar lightly. The jar is cooked in a washbottle of boiling water 20 minutes for quarts and 15 minutes for pints. After cooking the jar is upended away from a draft to cool.

A strange idea among dairymen is that since calves drink a good deal of liquid food, water is not required. This is a sad mistake says O. A. C. as good clean water is needed before calves at least three times a day. A calf's body is more than half water.

PRONUNCIATION AID

June Webster, descendant of the famous lexicographer, Noah Webster, presents a copy of her ancestor's work to the Publicity Department of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition Association to help them in pronouncing properly the name of the big event which opens June 1 to celebrate the 150th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence. There are many types of pronunciations heard but there is just one proper way Noah says. It is "Ses-qui-cen-ten-nial" with the accent on the first syllable of the "Sesqui" and on the second syllable of the "centennial."

THE VOICE OF THE LIBERTY BELL

This is one of the two new official posters of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition, opening in Philadelphia June 1 to celebrate 150 years of American Independence. The Exposition will continue to December 1. Dan Smith, the artist, has symbolized the epoch in history which the tolling of the Liberty Bell in Independence Hall, July 4, 1776, marked and has depicted the growth of the United States from the original thirteen states, represented by the thirteen stars which emerge from the mouth of the Liberty Bell.

FOLLOWS EMANCIPATOR

Milton R. Moskow, twelve-year-old San Francisco schoolboy who since the age of five has patterned his life after that of Abraham Lincoln, aspires to occupy the White House some day as his hero did. He has been nominated as a candidate for the American Youth Award established by the directors of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition, held in Philadelphia from June 1 to December 1 in celebration of 150 years of American Independence. Under the plan of the American Youth Award and the American Teacher Award, each state will select a boy and a girl and a woman teacher who best represent American ideals, and they will be given trips to Philadelphia and to Washington, where they will receive medals from President Coolidge.

FAMOUS ARTIST INSTRUCTS

William de Leftwich Dodge, famous mural artist, in his studio at the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition grounds in Philadelphia, where the 150th anniversary of signing the Declaration of Independence will be celebrated from June, to December, of this year, giving instructions to a group of young artists who are creating the "Rainbow City." Mr. Dodge is the color expert for the exposition, and every bit of color work done must be approved by him.

It Talks!

"IT TALKS!" exclaimed the astounded Dom Pedro, Emperor of Brazil, one June day in 1876, as he held to his ear the receiver of Alexander Graham Bell's telephone, then on exhibit at the Philadelphia centennial exposition, while the young inventor, some distance away, spoke into the transmitter.

Time has not detracted from the drama of this scene, nor robbed the emperor's tribute of its truth. Fifty remarkable years have passed. Important among their contributions to human progress has been the development of Bell's idea into a nationwide, universal telephone service. But the wonder of the telephone is still that which arrested men's thoughts a half century ago—that it can talk.

Herein lies its unique value to the individual and the nation. It provides, as nothing else can, a means of speeding over great distances, privately and without interruption, the intimate, personal tones of the human voice. It projects personality. It unites millions of Americans, though separated by the breadth of a continent, into a single vast commonwealth of speech.
