

LEST WE FORGET

With the crack of the last shell on that memorable November 11, eight years ago, there ended the most terrible struggle ever waged between nations.

The huge toll taken in lives and suffering cannot be measured by earthly standards, and it is indeed appropriate that Armistice Day has been set aside each year to remind us of this tremendous sacrifice.

To those who have paid in full . . . to those who have bled . . . to those who have suffered in body and in heart, we bow our heads in reverent devotion, and may the future show by our lives as individuals and by our conduct as a nation that this colossal sacrifice has not been in vain.

SEAGULL IS COPIED IN NEW AIRPLANE

Novel Design Inspired by Study of Birds.

Garden City, L. I.—The flight of birds furnished the first inspiration that led man to fly. He then departed from the principles he learned from them and flew in ships of his own. Now the saga of flight has turned within its own wing spread and man is again looking to the birds.

Leonard W. Bonney of Flushing, L. I. has gone back to the original principles and by study of the flight of birds has developed and constructed an airplane that is revolutionary in design.

Bonney began his research almost two years ago. He studied many types and finally decided that the seagull embodied more principles than man could make use of than any other bird. He caught many gulls and tested their weight-carrying ability, their "lift" strength and measured their wing spread. Thus he came to the ideal proportions of a seagull.

Finally one came into his hands that measured up to the standards he had set. That bird was sacrificed on the altar of science. The others were set free. Casts were made of the body of the bird and drawings were made from the casts.

The new plane is now almost ready to fly. In a few days the designer will wheel his invention from the hangar, and before a crowd of skeptical mechanics and designers from nearby fields he will take his plane into the air.

The lines of the new plane incorporate entirely the lines of the unfortunate gull. By the pressure of a lever in the cockpit the wings may be folded back along the side of the fuselage, enabling the inventor to guide his ship into an ordinary garage. The folding is done by hydraulic means and the wings are locked, either in flying position or folded with gun locks.

Faroe-Shetland Channel Has 3 Layers of Water

London.—A strange three-layer arrangement of water has been revealed by recent hydrographic investigation of the Faroe-Shetland channel, north of Scotland. The layers are so distributed that a swimmer in the channel could take his choice of swimming in Atlantic ocean water at the surface or diving into the Norwegian sea which flows at the bottom, while between top and bottom he could enjoy a mixture of the two kinds of water with a dash of Icelandic arctic current added to the blend.

The observations of the channel have just been reported to the international council for the exploration of the sea.
