

Peach Twigs and Scientific Planning

THE peach twig dips downward, so many believe, when held over underground water supplies. So firm is the faith of some people in its supposed infallibility that they never undertake the labor and expense of digging a well without making a test for hidden water with this natural divining rod.

In preparing for the growth of telephone facilities to meet future demands, there is no peach-twig substitute for foresight. All expenditures of labor and money must be based on scientific planning. Careful studies must be made of present and future conditions in the locality to be served. Probable population and the volume and nature of telephone traffic must be estimated years ahead. Plant must be made capable of expansion. Capital must be arranged for in advance if growth is not to be delayed.

One of the vital phases of the Bell System's task of providing America with a nation-wide, universal service is that of foreseeing and providing for the future needs of the nation.

If the motor valves do not seat proper on the piston rings they will not hold compression, and you do not get the miles of transportation you have paid for, which soon cost more money than a new set of piston rings and a valve grind.

We have the equipment to make the old valves like new, and valve seats that make 'em fit.
