each land owner will owe. Now is the time to start with the plan to meet this requirement so that when the time arrives, it will not be a problem.

Debts Not Burdensome

"I am much interested in comparisons I am able to make between this and other farming localities with which I am familiar. I do not hesitate to make the statement that I do not believe there is a straight farming community anywhere where there are as many farmers on as few acres as we have here that owe as little money as our local farmers owe at this time. Farming conditions have not been good nationally. Many places land prices advanced to high levels and have had to take the comparative fall while our prices were never inflated and we have had no special trouble in the shrinkage in values. The Federal Land Bank is loaning practically the same amount on farm lands here at this time that they did several years ago which is a condition hard to find in any other farming community in any state. Our local farm loan association has not had a single foreclosure since its organization which is a most unusual condition and one of which we may well be proud.

"If we limit our farm holdings to the size which we can farm intensively, hold our livestock to the limit of the farm, confine our cash crops to those which we know we can market and keep accurate records of the business transacted, our success is assured."

STATUE OF ST. JOSEPH UNVEILED IN CEREMONY

Gift to Local Catholic Pastor Presented as Tribute for Many Services Done.

An interesting ceremony took place at the Catholic church, St. Mary of Angels, on December 29. Solemn mass was celebrated by the Very Rev. Father O'Rourke, pastor of The Dalles, and dean of the district. He was assisted by the local pastor, Father Dominic O'Connor, O. M. Cap. After the mass the Very Rev. Dean unveiled and blessed the new statue of St. Joseph. He then explained the meaning of the ceremony and reminded the congregation that in kneeling before that statue to ask St. Joseph's intercession with God, they were not worshipping or adoring that statue. He explained that it was like the photo of a friend which recalls the friend to memory as well as his kindness, love, goodness and virtue.

So this statue reminds us of goodness, kindness and holiness of St. Joseph and therefore recalls to us his influence with God and with Jesus Christ whose foster father he was. This statue, he added, had a special significance for the people of this parish for it was a tribute of love and devotion to their wonderful pastor for his many sacrifices for his fellow men. Not only had he voluntarily served as a chaplain in the world war and been in the thick of the fighting to administer the sacraments to the soldiers, but as a patriot he had sought freedom for his native land of Ireland.

One of Washington's greatest generals, Stephen Noylan, was like Father Dominic, as he was best known, a Corkman, and they both had the same principles, the principles of freedom enshrined in our glorious Declaration of Independence.

For these principles Father Dominic your beloved pastor endured much suffering, he was hunted, attempts were made to assassinate him, he suffered the tortures of a long imprisonment and was finally exiled. This statue is a tribute by some of his Irish American admirers and is given to him in memory of his heroic comrades who were executed for seeking the freedom of their country, a freedom that belongs to every nation. That is the meaning of the inscription.

"Now his exile was your benefit. He is now sacrificing himself for you and your parish. Rather than take a personal gift, he takes this statue to beautify your church. And the many other improvements in this church testify to his life of work and sacrifice for you.

"Offer your prayers to God through Saint Joseph for your good pastor and for the kind friends who donated this beautiful statue and for those noble and heroic comrades of Father Dominic. May this glorious saint bless you and your families and your city, and obtain from God for you many graces and blessings."

Miss Peggy O'Rourke, of Bend, a niece of Father O'Rourke, presided at the organ and rendered several solos. Miss O'Rourke is well known to the parishioners as a talented musician and vocalist.

The new statue is a product of the art studios of A. Daprato Co. of Boston and Italy. It is five feet four inches high and bears the following inscription:

"In memory of the Irish Republican martyrs, donated to Rev. Dominic O'Connor, O. M. Cap. By the Sinn Fein Society of Boston, Inc., Boston, Mass."

High-Sounding Names Given to Foundling

So long as there are foundlings doubtless there will be the problem: what to name them.

Recently the Lewisham board of guardians, in England, tried a more elaborate device—with rather complicated results, according to newspaper reports. An infant was found abandoned in a motor car, and, striving to find a name that should contain a reference to the history of the case, one member of the board suggested that the baby be called Alice Motor. Another member urged that they choose a "decent name," and then still another objected that as yet they didn't know whether the foundling was a girl or a boy.

The chairman of the board thought it was a girl. But the deputy clerk, "having made inquiries," made the emphatic announcement that the child was a boy. This detail established the quest of a name was resumed.

"In what part of the High street was the child discovered?" asked a board member, reminding the assembled company that "we had a child discovered in Lewisham park some years ago and called it Park."

The clerk said the child had been found near the King's hall. "Call it George King," some one ventured. And since the discovery had been made close to Granville park, another thought the boy should be named George Granville. Compromise ended in the bestowal of a very grand name indeed: George Granville King. And as such it was duly christened by the chaplain.

Lasting Monument to Glory of Early Rome

El Djem, Tunis, contains one of the finest Roman monuments in North Africa, an amphitheater of five stories, the third largest in the world. Situated on a plain near the desert frontier, it can be seen many miles off rising like a mountain of stone, dominating the surrounding landscape, and completely dwarfing the shabby little Arab village at its base.

The immense pillars and blocks of stone used in its construction had to be hauled over specially built roads by an army of slaves and teams of oxen from quarries twenty miles away. The Roman occupation ceased at the end of the Third century, but this massive, well-preserved structure still stands, a silent and enduring witness to past glory.

No trace of the luxurious city of Thysdrus remains, which, with its 100,000 inhabitants, once occupied the site of the present-day squalid village of El Djem, nor do the surrounding empty plains, with camels nibbling at cactus bushes, help us to visualize the thickly populated towns and fertile fields of former days.—Christian Science Monitor.

Colonists Not Blind to Beautiful Things

The gold and silver trades of America are among its oldest and most picturesque industries and have played a not unimportant part in our history. The earliest settlers brought with them treasures in gold and silverware from their homes in England, France and Holland. Although the Puritans frowned on the vanity of personal adornment they brought large silver buckles to wear on their shoes, and women wore brooches.

At an early period craftsmen skilled in making beautiful things of gold and silver crossed the Atlantic and continued their work in the new land. The first gold and silversmiths in the colonies did all their work by hand, using few and simple tools. In general, each artist knew how to work in all metals. He made a variety of articles—brooches, rings, forks, spoons and the larger pieces of silverware for the table.

One of the best known craftsmen of the early period of our native art was Paul Revere. His father had been a silversmith and Paul inherited the business when nineteen. Like other artists of his time he was extremely versatile and could engrave crests and coats-of-arms, making bookplates and prints, carve wooden frames for portraits, cast bells and design and execute silverware.

Nye's First and Last Job as Paper Hanger

I decided to economize in the matter of paper hanging, thinking that I would save the paper hanger's bill and put the money into preferred trotting stock. So I read a household hint, which stated how one should make and apply paste to wall paper, how to apply the paper, and all that. The paste was made by uniting flour, water and glue in such a way as to secure the paper to the wall and yet leave it smooth. First the walls had to be "sized." However, I took a tape measure and sized the walls.

Next I began to cook the paste in a large milk pan. It looked very repulsive, but it looked so much better than it smelled that I did not mind. Then I put about 5 cents' worth of it on one roll of paper and got up on the chair to begin. My idea was to apply it to the wall mostly, but the chair tipped, and so I papered the piano and my wife on the way down. My wife gasped for breath, and then she laughed at me. That is the reason I took another end of the paper and repaired her face. I cannot bear to have anyone laugh at me when I am unhappy.—From "Bill Nye, His Own Life Story," by Frank Wilson Nye.

It Killed a Cat! But---

YOU HAVE probably heard your mother or your grandmother say that if a person wants a thing long enough and bad enough, he will get it.

And we believe that is true. If you want a Ford, and keep on wanting a Ford, until finally you come and ask us what we will do to help you buy a Ford, you'll get it.

Our business is not so much to sell Fords...Everybody wants one. Our business is to help folks buy Fords. They do say that curiosity killed a cat, but on the other hand, it has enabled thousands to own own Fords. Most of the folks who buy Fords from us—and we have sold many—come to us through curiosity. They don't think they can buy.

You don't think YOU can buy. But we do, and if you will ask us we will tell you why. And we won't worry you if you don't agree with us.
