GLOOM WAITS BAD FOR FARMING, LEADER SAYS

Kansas State College Head Urges That Bright Side of Farm Be Considered.

President Farrell, of the Kansas State Agricultural college, was quoted recently as declaring before a Kansas farm conference that Kansas had been stressing depression too strongly.

"Overemphasis of the pessimistic side of any business occupation or life has a bad effect, particularly on the person overemphasizing it," was the text of his discussion.

His former auditors cheered when he said: "Farm leaders and organizations who have been seeing ruin and unfair dealings for farmers for years and who talk and write nothing else, have placed themselves in the position by now that the public discounts everything they say. No other industry is subject to the outpouring of gloom that flows over farmers. Bankers have had a hard time with many failures in Kansas and the middle west, but you have not heard them declaring that banking is a poor business."

"Merchants by the hundreds have failed and profits have been slim, but the merchants do not grovel in public. Newspapers have consolidated, gone out of business and otherwise tried to get down to meet the conditions of deflation, but they do not complain there is no chance for the publisher. Farmers have their problems, but we should point sometimes to those who succeed and not confine our remarks to those who fail, and thus steadily undermine the basis for productive industry."

WEST SHOWS BIG GROWTH IN PRODUCTION OF POWER

Western states continue to lead the country in power production. With only a little more than 8 per cent of the population of the nation, 11 western states had 14 per cent of the total number of electric consumers, 13.5 per cent of the domestic consumers and 22 per cent of the industrial consumers of the United States, according to a survey announced by the Electrical World.

The number of electric consumers in the west increased 179,196 during 1926, bringing the total as of January 1, 1927, to 2,726,209, as compared with 19,523,551 for the nation as a whole.

In per capita generation of electricity no section of the country can compete with the Pacific coast. Oregon is included among the first fifteen states of the union. The addition in the west to the generating capacity in 1926 was 302,000 horsepower. It is estimated that the increase during 1927 will exceed 430,000 horsepower in 16 hydroelectric plants and four steam stations. The construction budget for 1927 for the western area is estimated to be $174,000.

Electric companies, with many millions of dollars invested and distributing light and power under state regulations, are keeping ahead of the demand which is steadily increasing as the west develops and the increased use and practicability of electricity is manifest. Local companies are reaching out as rapidly as practicable to serve agricultural and horticultural districts, and by practicing economies they are able to prevent increases in rates, selling electric energy under the pre-war prices.

IMRIE TELLS OF WORK AT AMERICAN FALLS RESERVOIR

Information about the American Falls reservoir was given by George C. Imrie, formerly water superintendent here, in a letter to Tom Fraser. In part Mr. Imrie had the following to say:

"We are putting the finishing touches on the American Falls dam and expect to move to the Owyhee project some time this summer."

"At the present time we have more than 500,000 acre feet of water stored in the American Falls reservoir and expect to hit the million mark before high water in the spring. The capacity of the reservoir is 1,700,000 acre feet, or 34 times the capacity of the Cold Springs reservoir. When the reservoir is full it will be 20 miles long and five miles wide on the average."

POULTRY ORGANIZATION IN WASHINGTON GROWS

Spokane, Washington — Fifty of the 100 members of the Spokane Poultry Farmers' association attended the annual meeting recently at Spokane. One indication of the prosperous condition of the association, now three and a half years old, is that members voted to increase the capital stock from $10,000 to $50,000. The membership represents about 55,000 layers.

The report of H. C. Jackman, secretary-treasurer and manager, showed that the association handled 34 carloads of eggs, and in addition brought in 49 carloads of feed for the members. Sales amounted to $220,000 last year, compared to $96,000 for 1925.

Changes in the by laws made at the meeting will permit the poultryman with a flock of 100 to become a member while formerly no one was admitted with a flock under 200. Another change admits a producer, regardless of the color of eggs produced, while only producers of white eggs were admitted before.

Doctor's "Pail" Landed Him in Mayor's Chair

The only doctor in Scarpville decided that he would like to be mayor, so he came out in the Scarpville Times with the following notice:

"Fellow citizens, I am running for mayor. I have no particular platform, no reforms to make, nothing to say against my opponent; I merely desire to be mayor of this town before I die. I know every man, woman and child in this town. I have been present at every birth, marriage or death in Scarpville for the past forty years. If I am not elected I am going to leave the town. But before I go I will tell all I know about each one of you."

For the first time in the history of the town everyone of legal age turned out. When the ballots were counted the old doctor had received all but one vote, and that was cast by a man who had just moved into town.—Los Angeles Times.

Well-Trained Horses

Visitors to a circus or fair are always much impressed by the clever acting of the horses which prance around the ring, and rise up on their hind legs and dance to the music of the band. In fact, so highly have horses been trained that at the circus of Cortz Altdorf, a famous continental ring, a horse made a number of balloon ascents alone. The ancients are said to have been great masters of horse training. The people of Italy taught their horses to dance to the music of the pipe. In the Thirteenth century there was shown a famous rope-dancing horse, while the artists of the fourteenth century found plenty of scope for their talents in depicting the different methods employed in the instruction of performing ponies and horses, one of which was taught to tap his forelegs and hind legs on a board like a man playing a drum.

Curiosity Wins

"Look here," began the youth, as he entered a butcher's shop and displayed two lovely-looking black-and-blue eyes. "You have fresh beef for sale?"

"I have," responded the butcher. "And fresh beef is good for black eyes, is it not?"

"It is."

"Very well. I have the eyes, you have the beef. Do you think you can sell me a pound or so without asking how I got ornamented?"

"I'll do my best, sir."

The butcher cut off the meat and received his money without another look at his customer. At the last moment, however, the old Adam proved too strong for him.

"Look here," he said, handing back the cash, "I'll make you a present of the beef. Now tell me all about the fight."

Billiards on Horseback

One of the novelties introduced in the game of billiards was the playing of a game on horseback by the members of the Paris Jockey club in 1838. The horses were taken up a flight of stairs to the billiard room with great difficulty. The game was for 12 points up and was finished in 20 minutes.

The origin of the game of billiards is rather hazy. Too great proficiency at billiards even today is said by many to be a sign of a mispent youth, and it was perhaps this idea that kept our forefathers so quiet upon the subject, says a writer in THE HERALD. That it existed centuries ago is indicated by a passage in Shakespeare's "Cleopatra" in which she invites Charmion to play billiards with her.

Uselessness of War Proved by Voltaire

One of Voltaire's most popular books, his history of Charles XII, is devoted to a practical proof of the utter futility of war. The life of Charles XII of Sweden is an example without equal of the colossal futility of war. Charles, one of the world's most inspiring examples of a capable, indefatigable ruler, in a life of self-denial, had but one fault. He spent his entire life making war. Starting his career at the age of eighteen with the successful defense of his kingdom against the combined forces of several of the greatest countries of Europe, within a comparatively short time he was complete dictator of eastern Europe. Many times he overwhelmed forces outnumbering his own five- or ten- to one. Crowning and dethroning kings almost at will, his aims were usually altruistic. He sought always to be impartial and just. He undertook no offensive war with the intention of bettering himself or his country. Yet when he died he had done no lasting good. He had irreparably impoverished his own and other countries, and had wasted his great life, which might have been so productive of good to the world. In telling this most significant story Voltaire impressed upon the world the terrifying uselessness of the thing he so hated—war.—From "The Young Voltaire," by C. B. Chase.

Small Change of No Interest to Royalty

Louis Philippe of Bourbon, the French pretender, had a royal way of shopping. When the World War was at its height, he stalked into an expensive boot shop in London and ordered a dozen pairs of boots and shoes. The bootmaker wanted to suggest something on account, as the man was a stranger, but his remark that the bill would run to about $250 met with no response. So his wife tactfully asked for some money toward the cost of buying leather. The stranger pulled out a thick roll of treasury notes and handed it over. A week later he returned and "tried on." The result was satisfactory and the bootmaker inquired as to where to send the order.

"You may consign it to the king of France," he replied, and named his hotel. The order was delivered by messenger with a flowery letter in French, in which was enclosed $22.50, representing the amount overpaid. A day or two later a secretary appeared at the shop with the news that the king was incensed at the refund, adding affably that it would have been all the same if the balance had been on the other side.—Manchester Guardian.

The Blue Danube

Near Vienna on the Danube at the Iron Gates the speed of the current is from 12 to 16 feet per second—and the British monitor the Glowworm got stymied halfway up it, couldn't get either forward or astern, and had to hold down her valves to get a high enough head of steam to struggle out of it. It was a question whether she would go up or blow up.

It takes a special towing steamer, pulling itself up on a cable from one end and one-half to two hours, to go up this two-kilometer stretch. The Germans used locomotives to flow gins through it during the war. Down below Orsova these dreaded Iron Gates are not one-half so sticky as the sixty-five miles of rapids and submerged ledges below Drebnova. As a matter of fact, the "Schachtel" by Vilshofen is one of the nastiest parts of the river.—Negley Farson in Adventure Magazine.

Pure Air on Market

In Amsterdam, Holland, the municipal electric light works sell air to citizens. This seems an odd by-product of the electric industry until it is considered that the electric ozonation process is one of the most effective means of purifying air just as lightning "freshens" a dank and humid atmosphere, stimulating those who breathe it. The Dutch air is drawn down through a chimney 100 feet high, purified and dried by electricity and compressed into cylinders like those used for soda fountain gas in America. These are sold to homes in the city on an annual contract basis, for about $24 a year. Slow release of the air in bedrooms of people afflicted with asthma is said to bring relief to the sufferers.

Milwaukee Receivers Oppose Merger

Seattle, Wash.—Receivers for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway have decided to oppose merger of stock ownership of the Northern Pacific, Great Northern and Burlington railroad systems, H. E. Byram of Chicago, Milwaukee express, declared here.

House Committee to Draft Tax Bill

Washington, D. C.—By unanimous agreement the house ways and means committee decided to begin drafting a new tax reduction bill during the recess of congress.

Hancock a Real Patriot

During the siege of Boston, General Washington consulted congress upon the advisability of bombarding Boston. John Hancock, a distinguished merchant, was the president of congress. When Washington's letter was read, a silence ensued, and all waited John Hancock's opinion. Naturally, he was personally interested to a great degree, for his large and valuable estate was located in the heart of Boston. John Hancock, after a moment's silence, addressed the committee in the following words: "It is true, sir; nearly all the property I have in the world is in houses and other real estate in the town of Boston; but if the expulsion of the British army from it, and the liberties of the country, require their being burnt to ashes—issue the order immediately for that purpose."—The Market for Exchange.
