WHAT IS ADVERTISING?

"Advertising is the education of the public as to what you are, where you are, and what you have to offer in the way of skill, talent or commodity. The only man who should not advertise is the man who has nothing to offer the world in the way of commodity or service."
 —Elbert Hubbard.

HERMISTON LOCALS

A social event that proved delightful was the surprise party last Thursday night at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Quick, west of the river, that was planned by a group of their friends in the Minnehaha district. The party was planned particularly in honor of their daughter, Miss Madge Quick, who is a student in a medical college at Lomenda, California, and is spending a month's vacation at home. Entertainment number included a community sing, violin numbers by James McElroy and a reading by Mrs. W. G. Rodda. The 69 persons present enjoyed refreshments of ice cream and cake during the evening. Miss Quick plans to return to California July 29.

COMMERCIAL CLUB SEEKS MAIL SERVICE ON STAGES

Service on both first class mail and parcel post on two afternoon stages, one eastbound and one westbound, has been asked of the railway mail service by a special committee of the Commercial club. Thomas Campbell headed the committee.

The request, formulated early this week, was made in an effort to restore mail service for Hermiston to a parity with that enjoyed before the two local U. P. trains, Nos. 1 and 2, were discontinued. Since the discontinuance of the two trains Hermiston has had only two mail deliveries daily, one from the east and one from the west.
 The committee asked that the mail service be given on afternoon buses as offering the most satisfactory service likely to be secured. The request was transmitted through the local postoffice.

Red Hair and Souls

Not Found Together?

I believe that if the red-haired women one knows are submitted to an impartial comparative scrutiny it will be found that there is something difficult to define, impossible not to feel, which all of them lack.

It is the harder to distinguish in that few of them are destitute of attraction; yet the ruthless analysis of close contact will, in nine cases out of ten, bring the attracted up against some ultimate blind spot, some chord that does not sound, some insensitiveness that cannot be moved.

Until one gets near, probes deep, cares much, one may not discover it; but as one does one will. There is something inaccessible, something that does not respond, something, above all, that rejects responsibility.

There is a word for this thing the red-haired woman has not got, though it is one that has gone out of fashion and will probably be haled with contempt. A soul. The red-haired woman has no soul.

There are men and women who have souls; there are men and women who have not; and we know them when we meet them. Red-headed women belong to the latter class; and there is no other form of words which will cover their peculiarities except that which declares that they have no souls.—Mary Agnes Hamilton in the Atlantic Monthly.

Ocean Bottom Lifted

by Internal Upheaval

Can you picture a folding of the earth's crust strong enough to lift, in the space of 25 years, an area the size of Greater New York to a height of 11,000 feet? Such an enormous upheaval took place recently in the Atlantic, according to Popular Science Monthly, and was discovered by mere accident.

Twenty-five years ago a submarine cable was laid across the Atlantic ocean, passing near the British island of St. Helena. When laid, the cable rested on the bottom of the sea, about 14,700 feet below the surface. Recently, when it became necessary to repair the cable, it was discovered that part of the sea bottom had been lifted more than 11,000 feet, which brought the cable within 3,600 feet of the sea level.

Instinct Without Rudder

I wonder if we can differentiate between the mind and the instincts of the mind? If we can, I should prefer to say that instincts of the mind are discernible in the works of the great masters. But I am always apprehensive of metaphysical quibbles and mist, and before putting down the helm I will remark that the artist's instinct is the sail that carries the boat along, and his reason the rudder that keeps the boat's head to the wind; without the rudder the sail loses the wind. The simile seems to hold good. An instinct will carry the artist some distance, but if he have not reason he will drift like the rudderless boat, making no progress at all. — From "Awards" by George Moore.

Building Up Millions

Anything is attainable, if one only starts in a small way and increases daily, say in his savings. None doubts he could save one cent a day, and there's the secret of wealth, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. To become a millionaire, all you have to do is to save one cent the first day, two cents the second day, four the third day, eight the fourth day, and so on, doubling the amount each day, and in 30 days you'll be a multimillionaire. The total will be nearly $10,750,000. The final day's savings, however, must be more than $5,000,000.

Her Wonderful Eyes

It was between dances. They were sitting in a dim corner.
 "You have wonderful eyes," he murmured.
 "Yes?" she inquired, expectantly.
 "They are like stars," he went on.
 Her lips brushed him as he murmured. "They are so very bright."
 His hand fumbled in his pocket and he drew forth a glittering object.
 "They are so very bright," he repeated. He thrust his watch before her. "See if you can see the time in the dark."

Skeleton in Salt Found

A hideous coffin filled with salt and containing a human skeleton was found recently by a farm hand on the shore of the Black Isle opposite Dingwall, Scotland. Appearances indicate that the drift of the tide had uncovered the gruesome objects only a short time before. There is a tradition in that vicinity of burials outside of the churchyard in older times, and it is believed by the police that the find is the remains of one of them.

Umbrella in History

Umbrellas as screens against the sunshine have been used in the Far East from very remote times. They appear conspicuously in ancient Assyrian and Egyptian sculpture, where they seem to be an insignia of royalty. As protection against the rain, they were first used in England by women only in the reign of Queen Anne. Joseph Hanway, of London, appears to be the first Englishman to brave ridicule by using an umbrella.

Idea of Organ Is Old

The earliest organs were water-organs, and the first specimen was the work of Ctesibius, of Alexandria, in Egypt. Instruments from his design were carried to Rome during the first century A. D. and were played to accompany the great public games held to amuse the populace. It is probable that the organ was not introduced into churches until the end of the seventh century.

BEE MEN NOT PLEASED AT

HONEY PROSPECTS FOR 1927

A majority of honey producers in this district are not very enthusiastic about the possibilities on profits on honey production this year, according to reports that are being made.

The season has not been very satisfactory from the honey flow point of view, apiarists declare. Very little honey has been secured yet, and in some cases bee men are not anticipating anything like a normal yield. Some of the bee men have expressed doubt as to whether their colonies will produce much more than enough to carry themselves through the winter.

Occasionally a report is made of a group of colonies that is storing honey at a rapid rate, but such reports are not so numerous as those telling of low production.
