Operation Is Performed

Mrs. David S. Rowe submitted to a major surgical operation at St. Anthony's hospital in Pendleton Wednesday afternoon. Her condition is reported to be satisfactory.

More than 40 years ago, in 1880 or 1881, to get down to dates, a couple of youngsters named Joe Dyer and George Archer were members of a crew for the Newport Construction Co. that was doing work on the Northern Pacific and the Canadian Pacific.

The two young fellows separated after concluding their term of service with the company. Chance never brought them together again until one day recently when Joe was visited by a "stranger" who proved to be Mr. Archer. The latter with his wife was on the way home to San Francisco after a trip over the east, and they stopped for one day to visit Mr. and Mrs. Dyer. The visiting job was well done, according to Mr. Dyer, and had to do with much that transpired when they were boys together and some things that had happened since. "We took off about five hours to sleep, and the rest of the time we spent talking and laughing," the local man said.

Unfortunate That He Backed "Short Horse"

When Conan Doyle was in St. Louis on his visit to the United States he met some congenial souls—"cinema men" he says they were—"who would, I should imagine in a less dry climate, have been a lively crowd."

"One quaint fellow," says the creator of Sherlock Holmes, in his book, "Our Second American Adventure," "who had been a jockey at some period, gave us some funny experiences on southern race tracks, especially the adventures of some negro tout who used to get his information 'out of the oats box,' to use his own expression, and pass on for a fee the platts of the horse to his fellows."

"When the information proved wrong he had to invent excuses to avoid trouble."

"Yes, sir, your horse was beat by six inches, sir. But it really wasn't beat at all. It was just unfortunate. Did you see the race, sir?"

"See it? I had $2 on it. You bet I saw it."

"Well, then, if you saw it you would notice the rumps of them horses was dead on a line when they passed the post. It was a dead heat at that end, but you backed a short horse. That was all that was the matter."—Kansas City Star.

Ancestors in Seats of Honor at Feasts

Entertaining the spirits of ancestors and conversing with them is as real as an actual affair of this world to the natives of some of the small Japanese villages in the neighborhood of Tokyo.

Signal fires are kindled by the villagers before the graves of their ancestors and the spirits invited to come home with them to partake of the feasts spread in their honor. When the fires go out, torches are lighted to show the way home for the departed souls. As they walk it is not at all unusual for old folk to talk aloud to the spirits and often these simple folk point out a mud puddle to their spirit guests, warning them to be careful.

When a family reaches home, a tub of water is found at the entrance, in which the spirits are invited to wash their feet. At the table, the living members talk to the spirits, usually about incidents that took place while the ancestors were alive. The following night, the spirits are escorted back to the graveyard and bidden farewell until the following year.

On the Square

People who sit in the grandstand or stand near a race track in any position other than directly opposite the judges' box should not question the decisions of the judges in close races, because they cannot obtain a proper view of the horses as they cross the finishing line, says Science and Invention Magazine. The judges are so placed that they can view the horses directly in line as they finish, whereas spectators on either side of the finishing point obtain a misleading picture because of the effects of perspective.

If, for instance, two horses finish neck and neck, people watching them from a point ahead of them will think the horse nearest the railing has won. On the other hand, spectators viewing the horses from the rear are likely to swear that the one farthest from the rail is in the lead. Only the judges can determine a winner accurately if the race is very close at the end.

Relieved His Feelings

"Had a good lecture on Alaska, didn't we, Zeb?" asked one of Mr. Gorton's neighbors, meeting him the next morning. "To sit there by the radio peaceful as pie for two hours hearing him reel off the information was a grand rest for me, beat out with cranberrying as I be."

"It was a good enough talk," admitted Mr. Gorton, grudgingly, "but it didn't rest me any to speak of. Having to sit stock still without a chance to get in a word for two mortal hours. I was pretty well worn out afterward. But I took the lantern out in the wood shed and by the time I'd split up a week's kindling I felt kind of rested and calmed down."—Kansas City Star.

Badger a Fighter

The American badger's habitat varies from pine forests or dry tropical lowlands to the northern plains, wherever there is to be found an abundance of mice, gophers, ground squirrels, prairie dogs or other small mammals. It is a powerful digging machine and can capture any of them at will, says Nature Magazine. Although a member of the weasel family, the badger is not nearly so agile as its relatives, so must make up by strength and courage what it lacks in quickness. It is short-legged and squat, so slow-footed that a man may overtake it, but when brought to bay it fights viciously.

NEW ZEALAND MAN SEES

Mr. Mannex told Mr. Rodda that he liked the procedure in making inspections here better than in his own country. He said the general plan of operation here corresponds very closely to methods followed by commercial bee men in New Zealand.

He left Hermiston Sunday to continue his journey eastward across the United States.

"We think we have had some hard times in New Zealand, but I'm going home with the idea of expanding my business and going right ahead," he said.

Investigation of Bank Failure Urged

Tillamook, Or.—The first concerted action on the part of the depositors of the Tillamook County bank here, insolvent since March 18, was taken at a meeting when a resolution was adopted requesting the state banking board to make a full investigation of the affairs of the institution. It was also moved that the depositors' committee bring suit, either civil or criminal, as is judged best, against anyone the committee deems subject to such action.
