Silk for Body Sinews

A recent development in surgery is the use of silk as a substitute for various body tissues. With certain precautions silk sinews may be transplanted into the body. In this way, natural sinews which are too short can be lengthened. A further application is in the form of silken ligaments employed as a substitute for ligaments which have been torn or injured by disease or accident, as in the case of lateral ligaments in the knee, elbow, etc. Likewise, it is possible to create with silk new artificial sustaining ligaments.

Seeds Hold Life Long

Seeds of the Indian lotus a century old have more active life in them than the same kind of seeds of last year's crop, according to a report of Dr. Ichiro Ohga of the Education Institute of Dalren, Manchuria, to the American Journal of Botany. Doctor Ohga tested these ancient seeds both by sprouting and by chemical examination, and they won on both counts. The research was carried on during Doctor Ohga's sojourn in this country, at the Boyce Thompson Institute, Yonkers, N. Y.

FRANKLIN MASON, 81, FINDS MELONS PROFITABLE HERE

"Bears" Got Into His Patch, But Profit On Third Of Acre Is $151.27

That it pays to grow melons in this country, even though one has attained the age of 81 and is bothered by "bears" or something else in the patch, is the conclusion of Frank Mason, 81, melons were of wonderful quality, as many local people can attest. Following is Mr. Mason's record of his year's work with melons: "Is there a profit in growing melons? I had planted to water melons, musk melons and cantaloupes one third of an acre of ground. Some prowlers got busy right in the start and from all indications kept it up throughout the season. Mr. Skovbo, seeing melon rinds scattered over his pear orchard, seemed to think his sheep were the prowlers, but the idiotic manner in which the vines were mutilated, I could not believe sheep would be guilty. So a thorough investigation was made but disclosed no sheep tracks but did disclose a number of tracks resembling very much the hind foot tracks of bears, or boys. So, when we take into consideration the difference in the ability of bears or boys and sheep, we think the sheep should be acquitted, and Mr. Skovbo, for the accusation, sir, that from you there are some apologies due those sheep. "But notwithstanding we sold melons to the amount of $151.27, and as I am only a boy, not quite 81 years old, and realize that my ability to do very much hard labor is very much limited and my time worth but little, we think the melons we fed the pig and those we ate ourselves and the pleasure we had in giving away quite a few, paid the total, including time and labor, so I jot down all the $151.27 in the profit column of the ledger."
