Blondes Have Preference

Produce white eggs, Mr. Poultryman, or you will not be able to reach a profitable market, according to the conclusions of the poultrymen's convention at Corvallis last week. Some rooster ought to sue out a writ of injunction to stop such rank discrimination against the pretty brunette egg. Manager Dixon of the Co-operative Poultry Producers assured those in attendance that only a local market exists for colored or low grad. eggs. The convention elected M. S. Shrock of Milwaukie president for the coming year, and F. L. Knowlton, Corvallis, secretary.

Efforts are under way to make mixes for farmers in other districts on the project if they desire them. Mr. Jenks said.

HANDLING CHARGES ARE REDUCED FOR ASPARAGUS

Lampson Reports Reduction of 11 Per Cent on This Item in Marketing Crop.

Handling charges on asparagus marketed through the Three Rivers Growers association were about 11 per cent less this year than in previous years, according to a statement included in the letter sent to all members with final statement for the season's business.

The big part of the saving on handling was effected through the association doing its own warehousing and loading, Manager Lampson's letter stated. The expense this year was also decreased on making distribution of money to members. Following is a part of the letter that relates to the market problem that has been created by reason of the fact that two carlot shippers were quoting buyers in the same territory that is served by the association.

"In regard to the price, the district had one serious handicap throughout the season. There were two carlot shippers quoting into the same market to the same buyers nearly every day during most of the season when the markets were active. Of course, the last part of the season we experience the same difficulty we have every year and probably always will and that is, after central west grass comes on, our price is forced down very low. The district lost about 15c to 25c per crate during April and early May when the markets were active because of two shippers quoting into the same markets to the same buyers. This condition is within the power of the growers to correct.

"It is an established fact that our chief advantage in this district is in early crops. The production of early asparagus only covers a small area. It does not look like good business for neighbors in a small area to divide themselves into groups and quote their products into the same markets to the same buyers thru different channels, thus supplying themselves with destructive competition. The only way that we can capitalize our advantage in early crops production is to unify our marketing on those crops. The destructive competition among themselves is within the power of the growers to correct. This can only be corrected by getting the farmer who is inclined to break off from the main group, to realize that his personal action in marketing is just as important to him as his personal work in production."
