Artificial Silk Not Yet Near Perfection

Although most artificial silk fabric is made of wood pulp, it can also be made from cabbages, bananas, or any other vegetable matter from which cellulose is obtained.

People can usually tell the difference between pure and artificial silk by squeezing it up in their hands. Real silk, unless weighted with chemicals feels warm to the touch and will not crease. Artificial silk feels cold and slippery, besides being too lustrous.

Its creasing propensity is one of the greatest problems for manufacturers, and many experiments are being tried to cope with the difficulty, and save women the trouble of having to iron an artificial silk frock each time it has been worn.

Best Workers

Spinsters and married men are the best federal workers, bravely asserts Malcolm Kerlin, acting chief of the efficiency bureau which supervises ratings of government employees. The reason is that single young men and women think more about "dates" and personal beauty than they do of work, and the old bachelor, also lacking responsibility, is continually wanting to change his job. "The spinster," says Kerlin, "mothers her job with utmost care and the married man drives onward with ambition for his family." Kerlin finds that the best work in the government departments is done during the midforenoon hours.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Love of Applause

Human applause is, by a worldly man, reckoned not only among the luxuries of life, but among articles of the first necessity. An undue desire to obtain it has certainly its foundation in vanity, and it is one of our grand errors to reckon vanity a trivial fault. Reputation being in itself so very delectable or good, those who actually possess it, and in some sense deserve to possess it, are apt to make it their standard, and to rest in it as their supreme aim and end.—Hannah More.

Autoists Catch Ostriches

Catching ostriches by automobile is being tried in the Arabian desert, following the bagging of two birds in a day by a party recently. At first the birds outdistanced the cars, but they soon tired, and as the auto approached alongside, a hunter stepped on the running board, grasped one bird by the neck and pulled it into the car. It was too exhausted to struggle. The companion ostrich was captured in the same manner, and four others were shot.
