A large vegetable brush is very convenient for sprinkling clothes. The moisture is spread evenly and easily.

In spite of the fact that wintry conditions have been prevailing in Oregon, says the experiment station, vegetable growers are not unmindful of the fact that Mrach usually brings some good weather sufficiently warm to warrant transplanting of early cabbage and lettuce to the ground. Therefore plants are now being grown of these vegetables with a view to having them ready to set out just as soon as weather and soil conditions permit. Plants of each vegetable will stand light frost.

THE NEW JOHN DEERE SPREADER

WITH BEATER ON THE AXLE AND BOX-ROLL TURN

The only spreader of its type on the market with a low, easy loading box, combined with high drive wheels an important advantage made possible by two exclusive features—the beater on the axle and the box-roll turn. Unusually light draft—most owners use only two horses. The simplest spreader of its type—fewer chains, shafts, bearings—lasts longer—costs less for repairs.

FARM REMINDERS

From a farm management standpoint the general farmer in Oregon cannot afford to take time to produce baby chicks from a common flock of hens, believes the experiment station. Hatcheries specialize on high producing stock, while the farmer specializes on his general farm work.

Tom O'Grady at Bunker Hill Chapter III

It was a dark night in June a long time ago when two boys were working like mad making a trench on Bunker hill. One of these boys was Tom O'Grady, the other his pal Dick Jones.

"It's nearly daylight," said Tom to Dick and then he caught Dick's arm and said, "look quick, over there; isn't that the British army?" "Yes, I believe it is," said Dick. "let's tell our commander." And they went and told him.

It was the British troops and they were rapidly advancing toward Bunker hill. When they were close enough the patriots began to fire. Twice the British advanced and were driven back by the fire on Bunker hill. The third time they advanced Tom discovered that the patriots had used all their ammunition.

When Washington heard of Tom O'Grady and his pals bravery he said, "Boys, I wish there were more fellows like you in the army."

Tom punched Dick and said, "Let's go home and go to bed." They did. They went to bed and soon fell asleep.

About two weeks later Tom and Dick journeyed to Cambridge to watch Washington take command of the army. His army was in no fighting condition, but he had faith in himself and the soldiers. Soon he got them ready for fighting. Tom O'Grady and Dick were made officers in the army on account of their bravery on Bunker hill.
