WHAT PRICE DELINQUENCY

Some idea of what juvenile delinquency costs the state of Oregon can be gained from the figures recently sent out by Hal E. Hoss, secretary of state, regarding the costs of the state institutions during the months of September and August.

During September, each of the 102 boys in the state training school cost the taxpayers in Oregon $44.88, making a total of $4,577.76. During the month of August, when there were nine more boys in the school, the per capita cost was still higher. These averages were taken in months when the school should have been able to realize something towards self support from the farm it runs.

At this rate it can be estimated that the boys' training school alone costs the state of Oregon something over $55,000 a year. The cost of the girls' training school is half again as much, the per capita cost in September for each of the 76 girls in the school being $32.10.

Of course these figures do not nearly estimate what juvenile delinquency means to Oregon in the breaking down of ethical standards, the maintenance of child courts, the loss to the children of the fundamental training of citizenship that can best be administered in the home and the types of citizens that result from a childhood of delinquency.

In this connection it is interesting to note the statements made recently by the superintendent of the boys' training school when she talked in Portland. The boys in the school, she says, are ordinarily of a higher type of intelligence than their better behaved brothers. There is food for speculation in her statement that the bright boys are the ones who get into trouble because they finish their work sooner. Often a fifteen minute talk, she says is sufficient to change the boys' whole idea of his relation to society.

Is it possible that the people in Oregon are spending thousands of dollars a year to curb a tendency as superficial as that or do these statements merely indicate the way the people take delinquency for granted without really trying to stop the trouble.

CAREFUL, SOPHOMORES

A little horseplay is a good thing when administered on members of the freshman classes. No one objects to having a few tricks played on him at the beginning of his high school life. It is only when the administering body becomes too enthusiastic and carries the joke to the point of physical harm that objections arise, and it is strange how easy it is for sophomores to carry things too far. The freshman party this Friday promises to be an affair that will be enjoyed by freshmen and sophomores alike without any of the rowdiness often evident in such exhibitions. The sophomores are to be congratulated if they are able to perform that unusual feat of mixing horseplay with common sense.

After all, if all the children in the state had the advantages of being brought up in Hermiston homes, there would be no need for a reform school.

HAVE YOU BEEN BOTHERED

By Receiving An Unordered Box of Christmas Cards Through the Mail?

Many people in this vicinity have received such boxes through the mail with a request for $1 in payment for them.

The following quotation from a bulletin issued by the Better Business Bureau gives a line on the true values sometimes represented by these cards and outlines your rights in handling them:

"Several packages of these unordered cards, which the senders claimed to be $1.50 values for $1.00, disclosed the average replacement price to be approximately 50 cents.

"You do not have to pay for these cards. You do not have to return them. Just put them aside. If an authorized agent calls for them you may give them to him. If he doesn't call within a reasonable length of time you may CHARGE STORAGE for the bother you've been put to in keeping them."

UMATILLA COUNTY PUPILS SHOW GOOD TEETH RATING

The Umatilla county school children have the most highly perfect teeth of any children in counties thus far examined by Dr. Estil Brunk of the Marion county health demonstration unit, according to reports that have been sent in to the offices in Salem.

The reports show that Umatilla county's average for the number of children with defective teeth is 48 per cent. In this connection it might be noted that the average number of pupils in the Hermiston school having defective teeth was 47 per cent, one per cent lower than the county average.

In the town of Ukiah, 60 miles away from a dentist, 50 per cent of the children were found to have perfect teeth.

The average for other counties examined up to October 11 were: Klamath county, 65 per cent had defective teeth; Douglas county, 63 per cent; and Marion and Jackson counties, 58 per cent.
